THE NOBEL PRIZE

It would perhaps be wise for Nobel prize winners of certain countries to cash in their awards and then hold the sums for the days of better exchange. There is the case of Walter Nernst of Berlin, for instance. In accordance with the will of Alfred Nobel, the prize money must be paid in Swedish kroner says the Christian Science Monitor. Consequently when Herr Nernst cashed in his kroner, which in normal times would have amounted to 150,000 marks, he received 5,300,446 marks! Anatole France received 378,111 francs. In Scandinavia the effects were disturbing. The peace prize, for instance, was divided between Branting of Sweden, who received 60,786 Swedish kroner, and Lange of Norway, who received 100,473 Norwegian kroner. The Nobel committee, it is rumored, is somewhat worried over these absurd delations and inflations of the prizes.

One of the most conspicuous of New York financiers prefaced a recent speech by saying: "A man in my position seldom finds anyone to differ with him." He then pursued his theme serenely unconscious that in a dozen pregnant words he had portrayed himself as an autocrat surrounded by bootlickers and toadies too servile to do aught but bow down before his oracular pronouncements. What a confession! And what an existence! A life without natural contacts, devoid of the stimulus of healthful opposition, seeing wherever it looks only its own likeness, hearing whenever it listens only to its own echoes, says Leslie's Weekly. If gold in accumulating millions can so insulate its owner from the normal currents of human existence, a second and worse curse of Midas has manifested itself upon Wall street.

Study of foreign languages has decreased 3.58 per cent in our colleges during the period since war broke out in Europe. This is not very significant, but it is worth studying. There was a natural decrease in the number studying German, and not all substituted another language. There is a revelation in the increased familiarity we all have with world conditions, of the widespread use of English, an understanding that an American can go pretty well all over the world without being lost if he speaks no other than his native tongue. Most of all, there is the constant increase of live subjects in the curriculum. Something has to be crowded out.

What has happened in America, over and over again, according to an editorial in the Dial, is this: The potential artist has stopped halfway because no critic and certainly no public demanded of him the last item of his strength as an artist. The American critic has hit soft and the American writer has gone soft, and the public taste which the critic could have formed has been, for the most part, a series of sentimental enthusiasms. It has almost lost the faculty of intelligent enjoyment. It has asked its authors to repeat, not to create; and has faithfully stood by them as they grew progressively worse.

The Cheka, the Bolshevik secret service that horrified the world by its wholesale executions in Moscow, is to be abolished, as "it has outlived its usefulness." Lenin is reported as saying: Does this mean there is no further use in killing, or none left to kill?

There seems to be a lack of understanding as to just what a flapper is, but there is a general impression that she doesn't amount to much in circles where there are vittles to cook, dishes to wash, or houses to put in order.

Moscow money lenders do not hesitate to charge a hundred per cent a month. The money loaned probably figures down to so slight a value that even a hundred per cent does not represent an appalling sum in actual cash.

These experiments of scientists with the amplifier are interesting, but since they have been told that a molecule was heard washing its face, many are inclined to wash their hands of the whole business.

Natives of islands in the Pacific are apparently not ambitious to mingle in militaristic controversies. They are content to provide the world with its most eminent instructors on the ukulele.

The man who prays "Give us this day our daily bread," and then sits down all day waiting for the bread wagon to flag him doesn't do very much to help the wheat crop along.

The explorer who reports a two-faced girl in Africa presents evidence that human nature is the same the world over.

Keep Your Live Stock Out of the Mud.

Use Lehigh—the National Cement

A concrete barnyard is dry and clean in every kind of weather. There is a big saving in grain, for none is lost and the water trough is always accessible. Mud and rough frozen ground are bad for cattle. Build an inexpensive concrete barnyard and save money.

It's a good plan to have several sacks of Lehigh Cement always on hand for use about the place.
