

Spanish-American War Veterans

Memorial day is both a holiday and a holy day. For more than fifty years we have observed it. First they whom we honored were beardless youths, then men of mature years, then "the old soldiers." We are now reminded that we must also decorate the graves of the fallen heroes of the World War. North and South vie with each other in doing this fine service, for World War heroes came from the whole country. And Shiloh and Antietam, Gettysburg and Cold Harbor have their counterpart in the Somme and the Marne, Ypres and Flanders.

"Splendid spirit! Magnificent service! But while preparations for these observances take place, we are apt to forget the veteran of the Spanish-American war. So let us not say the heroes of two wars are honored, but rather the heroes of three wars.

We have never given the Spanish-American war veteran quite the honor which is his due. He did some great things for us. He was a volunteer soldier. He acted in a hurry. He suffered. He bled. He endured his hardships. He had his sicknesses. And he won.

The war with Spain in 1898 had enlisted hundreds of thousands of men; many more than were called for. Many of them never came back.

The armies in that war were made up entirely of volunteer soldiers. Conscription was not employed and not needed. Not a battle was lost in that war by American soldiers. Not an inch of ground was covered by retreat. For not a single hour from the time of the declaration of war until the finish was there any question as to the outcome.

The world was astounded by the feats of our splendidly equipped navy. Germany silenced, England was won over to our way of thinking, and prestige not known before was given our nation throughout Europe. We obtained a free hand in the Pacific, and established channels of trade with the Orient.

Best of all, friendly relations with the South were cultivated. Both North and South united in a common cause. And the Monroe doctrine was given new force and meaning on this hemisphere.

All of that was done in 100 days by the Spanish-American war veteran. Let us not forget him. Let us do him honor with the others on Memorial days.

From the time we rise until the day is done, we maintain an intimate association either with coal itself or one of its by-products. The leavening agent in our bread and the gas we breathe it with are from coal; so are the agents that tan our shoes, and that vulcanize the rubber of our automobile tires. We are indebted to coal for the various forms of ammonia that go into fertilizing, electric batteries and household uses; for aspirin, salicylic acid and many other cures for common colds; for elements used in manufacturing, insulating, coatings, phonograph records and pipe stems; for benzol, the best available fuel for automobiles and internal-combustion engines; for food preservatives, moth balls and disinfectants. While coal furnishes us picric acid, and trinitrotoluol, it also carries locked in itself oil of wintergreen and the most delicate flavoring extracts and perfumes.

It will be possible, according to Washington authorities, to preserve the historic battleship Oregon as a floating memorial, when the scrapping provisions of the naval treaty are put into effect. In order to do this, the guns will have to be made ineffective and certain other changes will be necessary. Perhaps the old bulk with its teeth drawn will prefigure that day when a battleship will be a quaint anachronism, a strange curiosity in some few ports where visitors may gather to wonder and comment on an age that made them possible.

ATLAS PORTLAND CEMENT

"The Standard by which all other Makes are measured"

PROBABLY the first place you ever noticed concrete was in concrete sidewalks. This was only about twenty-five years ago. Today hardly any other kind is built.

Concrete has proved its economy, its suitability, its permanence. Even though most of those first walks were built before concrete construction was properly understood, some of them are still giving good service.

Today your dealer is able to give you the same cement that has stood the test of over twenty-five years' use on all types of work. For more than a quarter century Atlas Portland Cement has been "the Standard by which all other makes are measured."
