GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH AN OLD FRIEND

Edward W. Pickard, whom subscribers know as the writer of the Weekly News Review of Current Events, doesn't have an opportunity in his columns to talk about himself. His subject is world events, what other people are doing, saying and thinking.

He could tell, however, a great many things about himself which would interest us. He might relate some of his experiences as a world traveler who has visited all contents and many nations. He could hold our attention with stories taken from his early newspaper experience in Chicago.

But what he would like to talk about most, perhaps, is his hobby-world history, ancient, medieval and modern. Long before leaving grade school, young Pickard fell prey to the fascination of what men had done in long ago ages, how empires had grown and crumbled.

It was this lure of history that took him to the far corners of the world shortly after he was graduated from the University of Illinois.
He bicycled his way through rural France and England, learning at first hand the geography of the countries whose histories he had studied. News hunts have taken him to all parts of the globe and as a reporter and editor he learned not only the ins and outs of American politics, but also the course of international affairs.

His extensive library contains many rare volumes, gathered during his travels. Most of his books are historical works covering the subject from the time of the earliest written records.

These are a few sidelights on the man who now writes for readers of The News. His study of history, politics and foreign relations provides him with an adequate background with which to review and interpret in the light of this knowledge the great rush of world happenings.

Readers of the Review are discussing more intelligently the various problems brought up each week by sudden turns of the news. Here they have found open to them a fund of information based on established fact and not merely the gossip of the moment. With this equipment they are prepared to converse with any one on the more important topics which make up the news of our time.
