

INDEPENDENCE DAY, 1925

U.S.S. CALIFORNIA

DAWES (1925) AND DAWES (1775)

NEW YORK AFTER 150 YEARS

CONTINENTAL ARMY IN 1775

BUNKER HILL FLAG

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

THIS year and next should be full years for that great American institution, the Fourth of July orator. For 1925 is the sesquicentennial of the beginning of the Revolution and 1926 is the bicentennial of the Declaration of Independence.

Moreover, it seems likely that Independence day in part this year and next, July 4, 1925, will take on an added importance from a practical viewpoint by association with the Defense day which is now being planned for recognition as a national holiday event with a fixed date. It was held for the first time September 22, the anniversary of the battle of St. Michael, in which the A. E. F. was victorious in the Meuse river, 1918. It is in effect a "muster" and training out of the various military agencies for national defense. It is approved by the people, theoretical Independence day is a fitting date for it, for the Fourth of July was the day of "loud muster" all over the country in early times.

doubtless Independence day, 1926, will be the more exciting, for there is to be a nationwide celebration under the auspices of the "Sequacious" National Commission of Independence of the United States, to consist of nineteen members. The President and vice president and the speaker of the House are ex-officio members. The President appoints eight members, the vice president four senators and the speaker four representatives. It is the duty of the commission to promulgate to the American people an address and to prepare plans for a celebration program in cooperation with the officers of all State, city, county and patriotic committees appointed for the occasion, even asking international participation, if it sees fit.

Moreover, Philadelphia is to have a celebration of its own in the form of an exposition to open June 1 and last until the close of the year. It is a part of the plan to demonstrate in a graphic manner the progress made in the United States in the last half century—since Philadelphia's famous centennial exposition. Other nations are expected to take part. The main purpose back of the display is to encourage more intimate commercial relationships, and to hasten the coming of universal peace. The exposition is to occupy the entire 200 acres of League Island park in the South Philadelphia and 400 additional acres adjoining. The city has provided for the building in the park of a stadium which will have a seating capacity of more than 100,000. Nine industrial buildings are planned as well as structures to be erected by scientific and other associations. It should be a good show for the United States has advanced tremendously in a thousand ways since 1876.

President Coolidge has recommended to congress favorable consideration of a request by Mayor Kendrick of Philadelphia, that the federal government participate in this sesquicentennial celebration. Mayor Kendrick asked for the designation of the secretaries of States and counties to represent the national government at the exposition; the appointment of an advisory commission of 100 members composed of two representatives of each state and territory; authorization of the signing of 500,000 $1.00 special gold pieces, 1,000,000 50-cent silver pieces, and a new one-dollar bill depicting the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Nevertheless, 1925 as a Fourth of July year has all sorts of thrills for the good American. First on the list was the celebration of the Lexington and Concord fights of April 19, Boston and its environs made much of it. Vice President Dawes and General Pershing were central figures. General Dawes is the great-grandson of William Dawes, Jr., who shared with Paul Revere the glory of the "Midnight Ride." One rode one way in the other another, spreading the alarm and meeting at Lexington to go together to Concord. It was an inspiring sight—when the Dawes of 1925 and the Dawes of 1775 met and exchanged greetings. The stirring scenes of one hundred and fifty years ago were re-enacted; there were patriotic addresses galore on historic spots and the radio carried it all to the people.

Then there were these one hundred and fiftieth anniversaries to attract attention: May 10, the capture of Ft. Mifflin by Allen and Arnold; May 20, the Mecklenburg Declaration at Charlotte, N. C.; June 1, the beginning of Kentucky under Daniel Boone; June 17, Bunker Hill. It was on July 3 that Gen. George Washington took command of the Continental armies at Cambridge, Mass., as commander in chief by virtue of appointment of congress; the anniversary is to be made much of by Boston.

In addition, the American Farm Bureau federation, through its 45 state federations and 1,800 county farm bureaus, has planned for the nation an old-fashioned Fourth of July, with a big chuck on dinner, flag, bands and speeches.

Wrote President Coolidge in a letter to O. E. Bradford, president of the American Farm Bureau federation:

"It was with great satisfaction that I learned of the plans of the farm bureau to take the lead in stimulating an organized, nationwide celebration on the Fourth of July. The gathering together of our farmers and our townspeople in these country-wide celebrations will give a new significance to the day. Probably no activity is of more importance than the encouragement and development of our community life. In the early days in this country the church was the center of community life. Time and conditions have changed. We are in need of social, moral and spiritual as well as economic community action. I truly think these Fourth of July celebrations will play an important part in the encouragement of such community spirit."

President Bradford has this to say regarding the farmers' celebration:

It is particularly fitting that American farmers should take the lead through their own organization in stimulating a great national uniform celebration on the Fourth of July, for it was just 150 years ago that a group of American farmers, gathered at Concord bridge in Massachusetts and fired the first shot in the great battle for American independence. From that day to this the American farmer has ever been the bulwark of our national independence. More than one million farm families are enrolled as members of county farm bureaus. And we are not limiting this celebration to farmers. We are asking each county farm bureau to invite the cooperation and participation of every individual and every organization within the county. And the national organization is asking for the assistance and cooperation of many national organizations.

As to the union of Independence day and Defense day, the original proposition was to have Armistice day made Defense day.

When the army general staff recommended in May that Defense day and Armistice day be combined, President Coolidge was found to be opposed to the plan. Armistice day, it was declared at the White House by a spokesman for the President, was one that should be dedicated above all else to consideration of peace. Being the anniversary of the day on which hostilities ceased in the most destructive war the world has ever known, Armistice day, President Coolidge thinks, should not be linked with official action of any kind suggestive of war.

The President, it was recalled by his spokesman, had just appealed forcibly to the nations of Europe to give a sincere demonstration of a will to peace and to rebuild their war-torn resources. He has repeatedly, since assuming charge of the destinies of the United States, proclaimed this government to be most covetous of world peace and anxious that America take the lead in pointing the way to peace and the material prosperity which accompanies it. This being so, the prospect of America choosing Armistice day for a demonstration of its military arm is regarded by Mr. Coolidge as most inconsistent with his policy of international relations.

Defense day last year was held in September in the heat of the national political campaign, and quite a furor was raised concerning it by pacifist organizations at the time. The President was not opposed to taking stock of the nation's military resources as was done on that occasion in co-operation with the states, it was said by the spokesman, and he probably will not oppose an annual inventory of that kind if it is not proposed to combine it with Armistice day.

Another objection to the plan is the fact that it calls for voluntary action of the people in responding to the muster call and the farther fact that there is no provision in the law for the Defense day program at any time. If such a military stock-taking of resources provided under the national defense act is to be undertaken annually, President Coolidge thinks congress should be consulted and should approve it by providing appropriate legislation.

Another thing that bothers the President is that the proposed program necessitates the expenditure of considerable money by the government and imposes upon the states a great direct expense, not to mention the indirect cost involved through the interruption of business that would be entailed in carrying out the proposal.

The President does not want to appear as in any way discouraging adequate preparedness. He is an earnest advocate of that, but he is just as earnest in his advocacy of government economy.

The President would have the governors of states consulted as to their wishes in the matter. The states must cooperate, of course, and are relied upon by the War department to do their share in making defense day a success.

The result was that the President expressed a preference for July 4 as the day on which the proposed national defense test could be most appropriately held. Then the question arose in the War department whether plans could be reconstructed in time to utilize July 4, this year. Many officers connected with the test last September felt that it would be better to abandon the plans this year rather than attempt to arrange the test in the short time available. They believed that rather than risk a failure, it would be preferable to postpone the holding of a defense test until July 4, 1926.

It was pointed out also that the regular army, National Guard, reservists and the citizens' military training camps would be engaged in July in their regular training programs, and these would be seriously interfered with if a defense test was held at that time. To assure an organized and successful demonstration, it is said to be vital that the personnel of these four branches be in their respective home communities at the time the plans are made, so that they can co-operate with the national leaders in charge.

So at this writing it seems impossible to say just what figure the Defense day test will cut in the Independence day celebration. It was quite a large performance last year, according to War department reports. These show that there were 6,525 local demonstrations, and that more than 16,000,000 people participated in one way or another. The regular army turned out 92,581 officers and men, the National Guard 167,633, and the organized reserves 59,168.

Fourth of July orators this year in search of a theme have a wide choice. They might do worse than to speak of some of the changes that 150 years have made. The Star-Spangled Banner of 1925 as compared with the Bunker Hill flag is a gorgeous theme, suggestive of the political progress of the nation. In 1775 we had nothing but little privateers under sail to fight our battles on sea. Today we have a proud navy, of which the California is a fine sample. The increase in population and material wealth is suggested by the picture showing the little book of the second census as compared with the big volumes of the fourteenth. When Gen. George Washington took command of the Continental armies July 3 at Cambridge a file and drum corps furnished the martial music. By way of contrast see the army band of today—with the New York of 1925 looming high in the background! All these suggest the growth of the United States of America from the thirteen colonies of 1775 to the wealthiest and most powerful nation of earth—the one nation dedicated to liberty, equal rights and the pursuit of happiness.
