

URBAN AND RURAL CHILDREN

Which have fewer physical defects city children or country children? The advantages seem to be in favor of the city child, according to tables recently published by the Division of Research, National Education Association.

Some of the findings derived from their investigations are as follows: It was found that 2.1 percent of city children have defective breathing, while 4.2 percent of country children have defects breathing. Ear defects were found to exist for 1.3 percent of city children and 4.8 percent of country children. Two and seven tenths percent of city children had enlarged glands, and 6.4 percent of country children. It was found that 7.65 percent of city children and 16.6 percent of country children suffered from malnutrition. Eye defects were found in the of 13.4 percent of city children, against 21 percent of country children. 12.5 percent and inst 26.4 percent. Nearly twice as many defective tonsils were found for the country children as for city children, 28.14 percent against 16.42 percent. One-third of city children had defective teeth against half of all country children.

Country children have more fresh air but not as much medical attention. With the same medical care and attention country children would be healthier than city children for country environment is more conducive to health than city environment.

BLANTYRE BREEZES

Miss Lee Moody and son, Leo, spent the week-end with relatives at Hendersonville.

The only drawback to living at home is if you don't eat all you have, you have it again for the next meal.

APPRECIATES BREVARD HOSPITAL

Editor Brevard News:

Please allow me through The News, to tell our friends in and around Brevard, who are wanting to know Mrs. Hilliard's condition since leaving the hospital there, that she is making steady progress towards recovery. Since the day of the operation, there has been continuous improvement in her condition; and we have every reason to believe that her strength will be fully restored, and that her health will be better than for many years.

I have been asked by friends here why I turned from Asheville hospitals and surgeons, and took my wife to the hospital at Brevard. My answer was that I thought my wife was entitled to the best surgical care that I could get for her; and as, in my judgment, Dr. Stokes is the best surgeon in Western North Carolina, I therefore took her to the Brevard Hospital. And both Mrs. Hilliard and I will ever be thankful that we went there.

I wish also to take this method of thanking the many friends who showed us kindness and only kindness continually during Mrs. Hilliard's stay at the Brevard Hospital; and I want to congratulate the people of that community, and of that entire section on having such an institution in their midst.

S. H. HILLIARD.

In Purchasing Food Consider These Things

If time is money, why throw hours away? That is what the housewife who stews and frets over a hot stove half the day preparing meals or putting up preserves does when she could just as well serve some of the easy "ready dishes" the grocer can supply her. There is economy in these foods from more than one angle. There is the saving in actual cash, as well as the saving in time and labor. Take tomatoes, as an instance. What housewife would add her time and labor to stewing tomatoes for her family when she can get twice as many for the same money in a can already stewed under the best of sanitary and scientific conditions? Tomatoes are but one instance. There are many more. Asparagus, except at the height of the season when it is plentiful and really fresh, is better and cheaper canned. The same may be said of peas, corn, beans, and many other vegetables. Both the expenditure of time and money are reduced to a minimum by using the canned foods. Few housewives today cook
