VARIOUS WAYS OF USING SOY BEANS

Appreciated for Their High Food Value.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Soy beans have long been a staple food product in the Orient. As they are becoming better known in this country, and appreciated for their high food value, people are beginning to inquire as to the best ways of cooking them. The United States Department of Agriculture says that the yellow, brown and green varieties of soy beans are excellent for use as green vegetables, and can be cooked like lima beans or any other of the varieties of beans used green. Dried soy beans can be prepared in much the same way as navy and other dried beans. The beans, however, require longer cooking and much more cooking than familiar varieties of beans. Either pressure cooker or a fireless cooker can be used to advantage, therefore, cooking them. In general, dried soy beans need to be soaked 24 hours and cooked for at least 2 hours. The times vary considerably with the dryness of the bean and its variety. It is better to simmer any soy beans than to boil them rapidly. Since the soy bean is very rich in fat, it does not require additional fat in cooking, but some persons prefer to add a little meat fat after because of the flavor.

Roasted soy beans are somewhat better than boiled. Soak beans over night. Boil them for one hour in salted water. Spread in a shallow pan, and roast in a moderate oven. Sprinkle them with salt while still warm. The following recipes suggest uses for boiled soy beans:

Soy Bean Loaf.

cupfuls boiled soy beans 1 1/2 cupfuls bread crumbs 1/2 cupful rums 1 cupful chopped celery 1/2 cupful milk

Soak the soy beans in water until they are tender. Drain them and add the milk, add the flour which has been mixed with a little of the oil and stir until thick. Mash or blend the soy beans; mix with the oil-thickened milk and seasonings form into a loaf. Bake in a moderate oven.

Soy Bean Vegetable Soup.

cupfuls boiled soy beans 1/2 cupful chopped celery 1/2 cupful strained tomato pulp 1/2 cupful onion juice 1 cupful water 1 teaspoonful salt 1/2 cupful flour

Soak the soy beans in water until tender. Add the tomatoes, bean pulp, seasonings to the celery. Add the water which has been mixed with a little water, and cook for twenty minutes.

Use for Leftovers

When you have two or three vegetables left over, even though there is but just a spoonful or two of each, combine them into a macedoine salad or a potato hash-quin.

Provide Canned Corn to Help Out During Winter

Every housekeeper likes to have a few jars of canned corn among her reserve supplies, especially if the corn is grown in the home garden, but many do not feel quite confident about canning it properly. The United States Department of Agriculture says that corn can be safely and successfully canned at home if a steam pressure canner is used. Corn is one of the non-acid vegetables which should be processed at a temperature higher than 212 degrees Fahrenheit which is only possible under steam pressure.

The corn should, of course, be as fresh as possible when canned. Handle it within two hours after picking, if possible. To prepare it for canning, cut it from the cob without pre-cooking. Add half as much boiling water as corn by weight and heat thoroughly. Pack it hot in the jars, add one teaspoonful of salt to each quart, and 2 teaspoonfuls of sugar if desired. Adjust the springs half way, or place screw tops on loosely, and completely seal tin cans before placing them in the canner, which should be hot. Process 80 minutes at 15 pounds pressure, or 250 degrees Fahrenheit.

In using the pressure canner, wait until steam flows fully from the pet cock before closing; otherwise the pressure is no indication of the temperature. Commence to count the time when the pressure reaches the desired point, not before.

Seal glass jars as soon as removed from the canner. The texture of products in tin is removed if the cans are cooled quickly by plunging in cold water. All cans and jars should be so marked that each lot can be identified. Keep them at room temperature for at least a week. Discard any showing signs of spoilage and watch others of the same lot until it is certain that they are keeping.

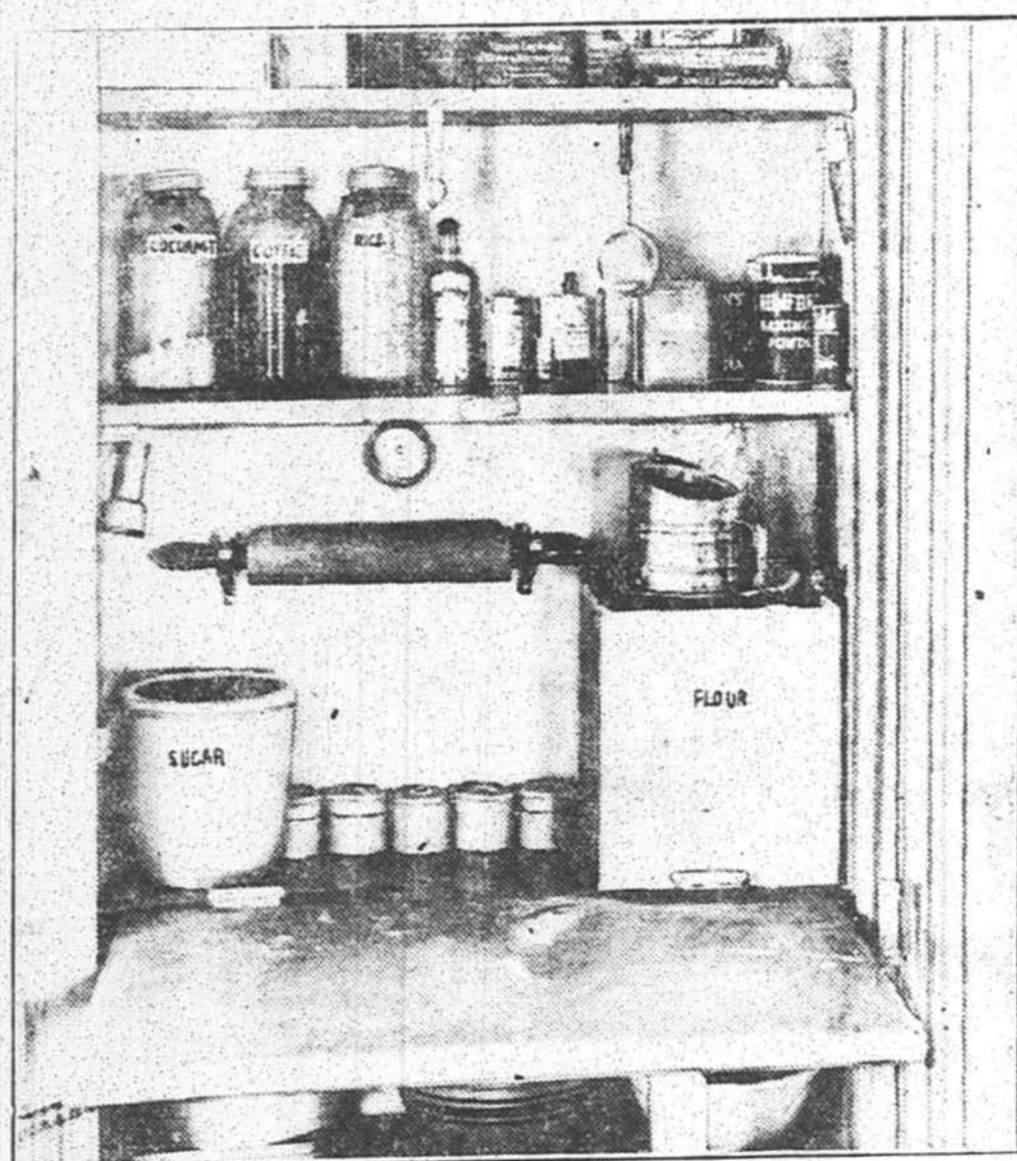

Homemade Soap Is Much Harder Than Store Kind

Perhaps you have wondered why some of your neighbors bother to make home-made soap when it can be purchased so easily. As families increase in size. Soap bills usually get to be quite an item, and home soap making will save $5 to $10 a year.

If you will save your grease and meat scraps you will be able to make dozens of bars of fine white soap. If you follow carefully the recipe on the fly label or one in the manufacturer's booklet, you will find that home-made soap is much harder and does not wash away so quickly as store soap.

Waste grease, as a rule, is of no value whatsoever except for soap making. When a sufficient quantity has been saved to combine with six cans of highest test lye, you can make domestic soap at a cent a bar. On the basis mentioned you would have more than a hundred bars of pure soap, which would last the average family one year and would be worth over $6. If you try it once yourself you will be very much pleased with the results obtained.

DROP SHELF IN CLOSET SAVES BIG SPACE

A Closet Made Into a Kitchen Cabinet—Showing Drop Shelf Down.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Having a closet containing a hinged shelf which can be let down to do duty as a counter or table is a good arrangement. Where there is not room for a kitchen cabinet the closet can be made to serve instead. With the shelf up, the door can be shut and the contents of the closet concealed effectively. The farmer's wife in Wye county, Va., who planned this ingenious use of a closet entered her kitchen in the county better kitchen contest, under the terms of which each contestant was to make the most improvement possible for the least outlay. The contest was carried on under the co-operative direction of the United States Department of Agriculture and the Virginia Polytechnic institute.

The closet was fitted up with a hinged drop shelf which rested when down on an extension leg. The equipment and materials for baking were grouped together in front of the shelf, and a high stool was placed near by, ready for use. Groceries were kept on the shelves above, in cartons, glass jars, or other neat, tight, containers. Whatever could be hung up was placed on nails, on the door or the edges of the shelves. Cook books were kept in a rack on the door.

A dish closet with a drop shelf close to the stove is a convenient place to keep cups and saucers, pitchers, bowls, or any other dishes that are often filled directly from the stove. When there is no need of using the shelf it is held up with a small wooden catch.

A homemade cabinet has a shelf, which is really a biscuit board. Chains hold it in place, and the tilting bins for flour and meal are also held by chains. The bins go back and the shelf drops down when not in use, covering the pot closet below. The same idea could be followed inside a closet. Precautions should be taken in any case to make the bins mouse and insect proof by fitting them with tight covers.
