A DOZEN COWS REQUIRE A SILO.
 Raleigh, N. C., June 30—The silo on the dairy farm is indispensable where the owner has as many as 10 or 12 cows and the cost is small as compared to the value.
 There is an increasing use of silos in North Carolina because silage furnishes, during winter, that feed which nearest approaches summer pasturage at its best. Silage is a sufficient feed when pasture is not available. It makes possible a cheaper ration, gives a greater feed value to an acre of corn and keeps up the milk flow in winter.
 "Forty percent of the feeding value of corn is in the stalks and leaves and these are saved when converted into silage," says H. H. Gordon, extension agricultural engineer at State College. "The average cow will consume 30 pounds of silage per cow or enough to carry her for six months. To figure the acreage required to produce this amount, one should figure a ton of silage for each five bushels of corn. Land producing 50 bushels of corn per acre will produce ten tons of silage."

 Mr. Gordon states that when feeding from the silo begins, at least two inches should be removed each day to prevent spoiling. Therefore the number of cows to be fed determines the diameter of the silo. Less than 15 head of cattle, will require a silo 10 feet in diameter; 15 to 25 not over 12 feet in diameter and 25 to 40 head not over 14 feet in diameter. It is not advisable to build a silo over 14 feet in diameter and should the herd require more silage another silo should be constructed.
 A wooden silo costs about $2 to $3 per ton capacity; a concrete silo, from $5 to $6 per ton capacity and a hollow tile silo, from $10 to $12 per ton capacity. Bills of material and instructions for building silos may be obtained free of charge on application to Mr. Gordon at State College.
