New York, November 21.—This is the moment to complete your winter wardrobe. If you have wisely held off from buying every last detail, there are many things you will want that will decide whether your wardrobe is really smart or just something with which to worry through the winter.

Beginning with the outside, you will want a top-coat of some smart tweedy fabric in a neutral beige or gray-green, or snuff color, to wear for street, or even sports clothes. This coat is smartest if it has collar and cuffs of some sports fur such as natural white wolf dyed a creamy beige, badger, or natural lynx. Sometimes the collar extends from hem to neck on one side, and just encircles the neck on the other side. This type of top-coat has innumerable uses as part of an ensemble with a creelman suit, and with kasha or light weight tweed and crepe frocks.

Bleached Nutria
Unimportant furs, treated so that they are lovely in color and texture have taken their usual place in the wardrobe. For an extremely smart and wearable, but inexpensive fur coat of the sports type, there is nutria, bleached to a pale beige color. This fur made on perfectly straight tailored lines, with a small upstanding collar and square patch-pocket is perfect for that hard-working extra cent that does duty for street and sports.

Another thing that you will want is a simple velveteen frock designed by Vionnet. This frock has been reproduced by the smartest shops in the country, and is one of Vionnet's smartest contributions to the mode this season. In all beige, or in beige and brown, checked, it is at its best. This model I like best has diagonal pieces brought from the sides of the bodice, fastening with a buckle at a low-waist-line in front.

For afternoon wear the more formal type of gown has been developed. Complete ensembles in velvet, black, beige, or dark brown or dark oxford gray are extremely smart. Worth has recently shown some in a dark dahlia red, a color out of vogue for some time, but revived again.

The velvet on the bodice, or of light fox fur in beige, gray, or of natural lynx of exquisite quality. The silhouette is quite straight, with a break at the waist in the form of a wide tuck at the hips, and the collar line is, usually simple. Black is very good just now. A frock of dull black crepe simply and completely made with an endless detail of tiny hand-done pin tucks, all made to converge to a point at the waist where the bodice ties, or to form a sun-burst across the front of the bodice, is one of the smartest things you can wear. Vionnet designed the original of this frock, but see versions of it everywhere. It is like just another black frock that you may have a close-up view, and the charm of its detail problem is due. This is the frock to wear modern jewelry in gold, or in extraordinary arrangements of precious stones that are being worn in New York and abroad this season.

Hats Like Hair
To wear with this black frock an hat made entirely of feathers, or of a very, made so close-fitting that it resembles hair.

An important addition to your wardrobe you will want a bouffant evening gown, made of fabric like chiffon or extrordinarily fine tulle, or crepe satin. The gown has a rather low swathed bodice, and an irregular hem-line that is in the back or at both sides.

Black is as smart for evening as afternoon. Flesh pink is extremely good, and "high" shades of blue, green, and chartreuse.

In Paris there is at present an important vogue for white satin evening gowns worn with ruby red velvet wraps collared with sable. The jewels worn with this costume are diamonds and rubies.

REED IS CHOICE FOR PRESIDENT

Written by a student at Brevard Institute.

(By WILLIAM PRUETT)

In selecting a man to guide the destinies of our great nation through a period of four troublesome years, great care should be taken to choose the man who is best prepared for the position. What we need is a man who is opposed to the centralization of power in Washington, a man who is broad-minded enough to bring our nation back into the warmth of the world's smile of friendship.

In searching through the Democratic possibilities, I come across the name of Mr. James A. Reed. To me, he seems to be the only logical successor to President Coolidge because his views do not conflict with his chances to become president. "The man who is a realist for the farmer will be a man of the Middle West and, naturally, would be in close contact with the farmers in his section of the country. It would be easier for Mr. Reed to solve their problems than Al Smith, one of the Democratic possibilities. In their judgment, Mr. Reed has the edge on Mr. Smith.

It is hard to see Mr. Reed as he really is, so to study his character and ideals, we must go back to the time when he started his stormy career by hanging out his shingle as an attorney.

His common sense and genial ways soon found their way into the hearts of the people of Kansas City. As prosecuting attorney, he secured convictions in 255 cases out of 287. This gives us an insight on his eloquence and his ability to think quickly and clearly. Following his appointment, he was elected Mayor of Kansas City, while in this office, he entirely suppressed gambling.

Mr. Reed has had a very stormy career. At one place in Iowa, his enemies declared they would shoot him on sight. Fearlessly, Mr. Reed went to this community and spoke. At the end of his speech, he said that he would walk down the aisle and those who dared might take a shot at him. Not a pistol spoke. This shows his determination to stand up for his convictions. His political enemies have said, "The political bullet that can kill Jim Reed has not been discovered."

Aggressive of spirit, commanding respect wherever he goes, Mr. Reed has earned the appellation, "Fighting Jim," although he does not appreciate it because he does not consider himself a fighter.

His accomplishments have won the admiration of the Democrats in Missouri and several other western states who have not been Democratic before. The Democratic committee of Livingston County, Missouri, on August 25, made endorsement of the Honorable James A. Reed as Missouri's candidate for the presidency in 1928. Senator Reed is non-committal. Concerning the presidency, he says, "The president should be the product of his party, not its czar. He is placed in the White House to carry out what Congress, representing the people, directs."

It is certain that the wet and dry question will enter into the politics of both parties in the coming election. In the wet and dry argument, Senator Reed is generally classed as wet. However, in close analysis, it is doubtful if this classification is correct. He is not dry to the extent of being a follower of Volstead, neither does he give blanket endorsement to the saloons.

Mr. Reed is American in all his acts. He realizes that duty to his nation comes first, and he strives to uphold American principles. For instance, from the beginning of that infamous organization, the Ku Klux Klan, Mr. Reed has spoken of it as being criminal and un-American in all its doctrine.

"Fighting Jim" Reed claims that his opposition to the World Court and the League of Nations has been the secret to his public recognition. While he has met much criticism on this score, Mr. Reed continues to fight for what he thinks is right and best for his country.

Mr. Reed is strongly opposed to the centralization of power in Washington. He declares that the states should have more initiative and that the centralization of power in the Capital destroys the initiative of the separate states.

Mr. Reed was born with the power on spirit of leadership. At an early

It was the leader of his party in Lincoln County, Missouri. Mr. Reed was a main factor in the exposure of the graft in the manner in which the campaign funds were spent. On account of his being unexcelled in debate, incorruptible and courageous, his political enemies have named many names to him. He used to be called "the woolly-bell currier of the Kaw," but now he is called "the saw-toothed raven of the Kaw." Many of his Washington utterances have become famous. There was one instance, that historic day on which he remarked of a certain senator who seemed to be a dyed-in-the-wool democrat, "When I see his ribbons and smell his perfume, I don't know whether to kiss him or kick him."

It can truthfully be said of Senator Reed that he means business in all his undertakings. He is a kind sympathizer with the problems of the common man for he is a man of the people. His activities have a broad range. He has a vital and compelling personality. He is a self-made man for his career is largely one of individual successes, achieved in spite of the failure of the cause for which he fought. His political enemies have to admit his earnestness and superiority in political affairs. Widely read and highly educated, Mr. Reed is just the man for our next president. His rise from a plow-boy to Senator and possible presidential timber, alone, shows us what sort of man he is.

Senator Reed has high ideals for his country and he views with regret the way in which Nicaragua has been treated. Backed by a host of friends and admirers, Mr. Reed is spruced on to greater efforts and higher aims. A man of his caliber must find his just reward in the hearts of the American people, America, as we call our nation, needs such a man as Mr. James A. Reed of Missouri.

A fortune awaits the inventor of a lifeboat that will float on a sea of trouble.

DUNLOP CITY

Throughout the world the productive Dunlop properties cover so vast an area that—if combined into one place—they would form a "Dunlop City" of over 100,000 acres.

THE great industrial capital of the South—Atlanta, with her 19,634 acres—is but one-fifth the size of "Dunlop City."

And even greater than the size of "Dunlop City," is Dunlop's world-wide reputation for building uniformly supreme Dunlop Tires.

Supreme quality made possible Dunlop's great size. In turn, Dunlop's great size makes possible this same supreme quality, at lower prices than ever.

You can expect more of Dunlops.

Camels give you all of the enjoyment of choice tobaccos. Is enjoyment good for you? You just bet it is.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.
