A CITIZEN AND HIS COMMUNITY

A CITIZEN'S interest in his community should not terminate with the fact that it is his home and the means of his livelihood.

It is to his interest to see that not only his own pursuit in life is successful, but consideration should be given to others around him who are helping to build up the factors in his community which make it pleasant for him to live there.

This mutual building for the future should be the aim of every citizen, and the resources which build up a community should be conserved within its own radius.
