LOCAL MAN MAKING SUCCESS OUT OF CELERY GROWING

Proving the fact that Transylvania county soil is well adapted to the culture of celery on an extensive scale, is the existence of the fine celery farm of Edwin Morgan at Cherryfield. Mr. Morgan experimented with growth of celery two years ago, and now he is said to be able to display some of the finest celery to be found growing anywhere.

Mr. Morgan was given his real start and much valuable advice in celery culture by C. C. Hutches, of Bradenton, Fla., who learned of the local man's experiments in celery growth through reading an article regarding it appearing in The Brevard News two years ago. Mr. Hutches came to this section soon after the visit and visited Mr. Morgan and rendered valuable assistance to him in his celery experimentation. Mr. Hutches was also instrumental in interesting a large number of farmers in the Rosman community in celery culture, and this year many families in this section are enjoying profitable returns from the celery grown on their own farms.

Mr. Hutches owns a summer home a few miles from Rosman, which is a lovely creation of nature with its beautiful sparkling pools, lily ponds, flowers of many varieties, all surrounding a cozy home. Mr. Hutches and family spent the past summer at their home here in the mountains, and left last week for their Florida home, accompanied by their two sons, one of whom married recently a Rosman young lady. Mr. Hutches and sons own and operate a large celery farm in Florida, and ship to the Northern markets around 50 carloads of celery each year.
