CHARLOTTE OBSERVER IS ABSOLUTELY RIGHT.

Readers of The Charlotte Observer are taking issue with that great newspaper because of recent editorials in which The Observer charged that the present depression is in large measure the result of mental attitude of the people. The Observer is right, absolutely so. Of course, there are many angles to the situation, or condition, yet most of this depression is due entirely to the fact that we have talked hard times until we have hard times.

Whenever people stop buying things, then factories curtail at first, finally ceasing activities altogether. When factories stop, wages stop, when wages stop, suffering begins.

We know a merchant in this town who helped to start the hard times here, and that right in his own store. A man had entered this store for the purpose of buying a suit of clothes. He passed the time of day with the merchant, and courteously asked about business. The merchant replied with a harangue about dull business, and predicted that the country was in for a long siege of stagnation and starvation. Directly this would-be customer left, returned home, handed his wife the forty dollars with which he had intended to buy a suit of clothes, and told her that she must save that forty dollars and he would go without a new suit.

"Why, what's the matter?" the wife asked.

"Well, I went into the store, and he told me that we are in for a long spell of hard times. I guess he knows what he's talking about, so we must save that forty dollars through this hard time."

That merchant with this inferior hard luck story, had knocked him out of a sale, had knocked him out of a sale of a suit, and knocked the workers in the clothing factory out of the work necessary to make that suit, had knocked the railroad company out of the transportation charges of that suit, had knocked the cotton grower and wool grower out of their part in that suit, and down the line, had contributed to the stagnation of many places to the extent of a suit of clothes.

Multiply this one case by several millions, and a blind man can see the disastrous results that are bound to follow. As we get it, The Charlotte Observer recognizes this as the big influence in impeding the progress of business, and believes that discontinuance of this habit of hollering hard times would result in revival of business.

The Observer is right, we believe.

AN HONOR THAT COMES TO BUT FEW MEN.

We are so accustomed to singing the praises of statesmen, politicians, warriors and financial wizards that many heroic lives in other lines of endeavor are permitted to pass across the stage of Time unnoticed, and heroic acts and activities often go by without record. We look in to air, and are thrilled with the accomplishments and achievements of the man who sails an airplane to new record, and when he comes to earth again we bow down before him and worship at his shrine, many of us doing it simply because the crowd is there, and we, being still in the herd stage, go where the crowd is and do what the crowd is doing. We sit in the picture houses and are thrilled with the picturization of daring deeds as seen on the screen in the world of make-believe.

All about us, however, are men and women in real life, doing real things, rendering real service, genuine service, but so commonplace is it that we pay it no attention.

At the meeting of the Kiwanis club last Thursday two young men were telling the members of the club about the bigness of the Boy Scout Movement, what it is doing for the boys, what it has meant to the men of tomorrow. The Scout must be clean in body and mind; he must be honest; he must be courteous; he must serve others, in that he is called upon to do at least one good turn each day; he must know God, through the study of God's creation—the trees, the birds, and all the things that go to make up this perfected creation.

The Scout movement has meant so much to the boys of Brevard, the young men said, and has paved the way from boyhood days into the new estate of manhood which every boy must enter. Better men will be the result of this Boy Scout Movement's influence upon the lives of the boys.

At the conclusion of the splendid talks by the young men, Mark Taylor Orr, the last speaker, said:

"And, gentlemen, we owe so much to Mr. Fred Miller, our leader. Without him our troop could not have been in existence. Whatever good that has come to us, we owe it to Mr. Miller."

What greater praise could man desire? What bigger work could man do? True it is that this activity of a Brevard man may never be written on a page of the world's history, nor his picture placed in the hall of fame; no accumulation of wealth as represented in houses and land, stocks and bonds, will result from this activity. But in the hearts of the boys and young men of this community, in their finer lives and cleaner souls the work and influence of Fred Miller will live for centuries after our politicians shall have been forgotten, and the gains in sordid wealth in this generation shall have rusted away.

NO NEED TO GET MAD ABOUT EVERYTHING.

Every once in a while some citizen, and usually it is some good friend, will not like something that is published in The Brevard News. Then he gets ever so angry, and instead of talking the matter over in a friendly way, making suggestions which we always appreciate, he comes in a mood of anger, and starts talking in the angriest kind of tones and acting in a most belligerent manner, whatever that is.

No use of that. We always appreciate constructive criticism. We publish the news as best we can get it. We do not expect it to please everybody. Some of the stuff we feel that ought to be published makes us just as mad as everything, and we often wish we didn't have to publish it. But it belongs to the public, such information does, and it should not be held out simply because it is not pleasing to us or to some particular one of our subscribers.

Anyhow, there is no use getting mad about the thing. Write out what you think about the matter, and let us publish it over your signature. We do not intentionally or purposely hurt any one's feelings. We do not claim to know it all. Perhaps your opinion about a certain matter is far superior to ours. Then at least make an effort to convince us that we're wrong, and you're right. That is much the better way than getting mad and trying to bulldoze somebody about something.

We've always resented bulldozing.

OUTSIDE FOOD BROUGHT IN; LAND VALUES DROP.

In two separate articles released last week for publication there is close connection, such as cause and effect.

One article, based upon the federal census report, shows that land values in North Carolina decreased to a greater extent than that of any other Southern state.

The other article, based upon the figures compiled by the commerce department, shows that North Carolina bought $180,000,000 worth of food stuff last year that was grown in other states. In other words, one hundred and eighty million dollars of North Carolina money was sent out of the state for food that was grown in other states.

Is it any wonder that farm land values decreased in North Carolina?

Can you imagine the changed conditions had this one hundred and eighty millions of dollars been spent with the farmers of North Carolina? There are one hundred counties in the state, and this huge sum of $180,000,000 divided among the 100 counties, would mean one million eight hundred thousand dollars to the farmers of each county.

When, in the name of common sense, will North Carolina stop enriching other states, and feed her own people from her own farms. In no other state in the union can there be grown the diversified crops that North Carolina produces. Nearly everything that is grown, can be grown in North Carolina. There is a solution to this problem, there is a remedy for the existing evil.

GOOD FOR US TO MEET THE OXFORD CHILDREN.

People who love little children miss much when they fail to attend the concert, given each year, by the class from the Oxford Orphanage, Masonic institution. Aside from the splendid concert numbers rendered, and the enjoyment of the program itself, there is a finer joy and greater good coming to each and every one in such an audience.

Men and women in the audience look upon the boys and girls of the class, as the concert begins and throughout the performance, in the knowledge that they are looking upon those whose fathers or mothers, or both in some instances, have been taken away forever. The thought then comes to the man in the audience: "What if I had died, and my own precious boy were in that group," or "what if my little girl had been placed in that group, and I had died," and then it is that the most tender love comes to the surface, the finest feelings there are in men and women rise above all the base or selfish or hateful thoughts which might have been in one's mind a few ours previous to this moment.

Somehow a man goes back home after these concerts, more conscious of the mercy and goodness of God in being permitted to still be at home, with one's own loved ones. There is a deeper love for one's own children, and a finer reverence for the children of all men, when one has been brought face to face with the fact that had it not been for God's own mercy and kindness, one's own children would be fatherless, and they, too, would be in some concert, or some kind of an institution, being cared for by others.

While support of these children is a great help to them, the blessing that comes to the one who helps is ever greater. No one ought to miss an opportunity of spending an hour with these little ones. It does one so much good.

A STATESMAN SPEAKS ON INDUSTRIAL SOUTH.

P. H. Cavan, big employer of labor in his Louisville, Ky., factory, was speaking Thursday night at Blue Ridge before the Conference on Human Relations in Industry, and uttered words and warnings that all employers and leaders should study. He was speaking on the subject, "Where Is Southern Industry Headed?" and said, in part:

"It is only in the light of principles fundamental to human nature and written by our finer instincts in the hearts of all men, that industry, business, politics, government, or other activities of life in society can be started on the way toward permanent and lasting achievement. Every business enterprise must pay a wage sufficient to support a man and his family in frugal comfort and actually should include enough to insure comfort in old age. The business that cannot pay such a wage cannot be justified, is a hindrance to normal human relations, and by that token has no right to exist."

"An allied principle rooted in the same fundamental is one that looks to the continuous employment of the normal working force by which a business is carried on. It is as necessary to the worker and his family to have continuous employment as to have a living wage when he is employed, and so called living wage is mis-called if the employer feels free to discontinue he means of livelihood of workers in order to continue to pay interest or dividends on money. No amount of future industrial or business development can justify this practice or excuse it on a large scale."

"Another principle rooted in the fundamental of decent human relations is the one that looks to the security of the aged and infirm workers who have spent their best years in a given business, who under the present system often find themselves ruthlessly dismissed to make way for younger and stronger men. Through sound method of education and co-operation with employees this problem can be solved so as to bring about a normal degree of security and comfort in old age for every person employed in the industry and faithful through the years."

"It is hoped that the young giant of industry, that is just awakening in the South, come to a determined purpose to improve the human relations of life in society, and to make industry serve the lowest no less than the highest among the people, so that all of us may come to realize that true and lasting progress does not consist of persons getting rich, but it consists first in our own and then in the world's recognition of the personal dignity of a human being."

These are the words of a statesman and a Christian. This advice, if followed, would solve many problems that are now filling poor houses, jails and penitentiaries. This doctrine is the only one so far offered that is an antidote for revolution. The trouble is that we have but a very few Callahans.

The true value of horse sense is clearly shown by the fact that the horse was afraid of the automobile during the period in which the pedestrian laughed at it.—Louisville Times.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

Editor, The Brevard News:

I would like to say a word to my friends through The Brevard News as to a false report that is being circulated through this community on me.

It has been told by a party that I was found in a blockade still making liquor, which is absolutely false. He also told that I said "I would not have been there had it not been for helping the boys get started up."

I just wanted to explain this to my friends through The News, and ask you to believe "no such stuff." W. A. McCALL.
