WHAT HANNA STANDS FOR IN PUBLIC LIFE

The Republican Boss Represents Plutocracy.

HIS HIGH PLACE IS DUE TO BOO-DLE-USEFUL TO DEM-OCRATS.

(Special Washington Letter.) While the Bland eulogies were being delivered in the house April 7, Mark Hanna strolled into the gallery with a couple of young ludies, to whom he was showing the sights. He cocked his ear long enough to learn what was going on and "then turned like a craven and fied." No wonder! for the bare statement of what Richard Parks Bland was in public life is a severe condemnation of what Mark Hanna is and what he stands for in puone life. Bland stood for the people. Hanna stands for the plutocrats and trusts and jobbers. Bland never spent a dollar improperly in politics in his life. Hanna's high place is due nearly entirely to the unlimited use of boodle. Bland illustrated conscience in politics. Hanna illustrates the power of the almighty dollar. Bland's memory smells sweet and blossoms in the dust. Mark's will have the sickening odor of the vancy of Gehenna. So Mark did well to hurriedly quit the scene where the simple story of a pure man's life was being told for the edification of coming generations.

Hanna an Object Leason.

By the way, not long since when I addressed a monster Boer meeting at Trenton, a newspaper reporter represented me as saying that I wished somebody would shoot Mark. The reporter did not hear correctly. What I more than conspicuous; his ability and did say was this: "President McKinley is a gracious, graceful, agreeable, tactful gentleman. I think his natural inclination is to do right. It would be a good thing for him if somebody would lead Mark Hanna out into a sequestered spot and shoot him." 1 was talking of the beneficial effect it ticed law and fought Indians on the would have on the president's personal border and, like Cincinnatus of old,

"Although insidiously deprived of the fruits of his victory. Binnd did not e heart. Having abiding faith in the people, he led a crusade against the Saracen. He opened anew the fight for bimetallism. It was a persistent and a giorious fight-one not yet ended. All admire the gailant struggle made today for the freedom of the Transrnal. Bland stood as firmly for free coinage. He defended every kopje, traversed every veldt and fought with a tenacity that astonished the world. His attacks upon the opposition were so well delivered, strenuous and sustained that at times he drove his adbe almost within his grasp, at times as hopeless as the search for the philosopher's stone. In every vicissitude he was beset by desertions, in every crisis loaded with obloquy. His prowess breasted every difficulty-"Like to the Pontie sea,

"Think for a moment, Mr. Speaker, of the bright satellites that set out with him on what seemed like a holiday ex cursion. How many fell by the way How many turned against him! Look over this house, take a glance at the senate-aye, cast your eyes even upon the presidential chair-and then compute, if you can, the strength of the mighty tide that turned against him. And yet, undaunted, unswerving, uncomplaining, he held his course with undeviating fidelity.

"He was as constant and abiding as the northern star amid a shower of swerving meteors. Defying mutiny, like the great navigator who gave mankind a new world, his hope ne'er dimmed, his purpose never changed. However wild the tempest, however strong the bellowing flood of passion, he pursued an unvarying course. He was the great political navigator of the people. sailing upon the ocean of destiny, with the Declaration of Independence as his guiding star and the constitution as his compass.

"Mr. Speaker, this hall is still ringing with his manly words. They were the coinage of his convictions. His sincerity alone would have made him devotion to the principles advocated so persistently made him truly great. He had an academic but no collegiate training. Nor had he traveled in the realm of metaphysical disquisition, but he had delved in the gold and silver mines of the Pacific slope, had prachad followed the plow. It was a grand

Spanish War Taxes.

In graves for women made

To Hon. James D. Richardson of Tennessee, Democratic leader of the house minority, belongs the high honor of having driven the Republicans into an investigation to discover whether the Spanish war taxes are producing a surplus in the revenue. The truth is that since the wrangle over the Porto Rican tariff bill demoralized them so the Republicans have been in a nervous, timorous and irritable frame of mind. Most of them are fussy as an old sitting hen. They found out that versaries to insincere and humiliating Richardson was preparing a resolution devices. At times victory seemed to to investigate the revenues, and Hon. Sereno E. Payne, chairman of the committee on ways and means, whose present frame of mind, notwithstanding his Christian name, is by no means serene, straightway introduces a resolution of that sort himself, hoping thereby to forestall the tactful Tennesseean and reap a little glory himself; but the people are not all "natural born durn fools," as was Sut Lovingood's daddy, and they will not be deceived by Mr. Payne's transparent trick. They will give credit where credit is due, to Mr. Richardson, for he forced Mr. Payne to take the initiative. The probabilities are that the New Yorker would not have moved in the matter this side the resurrection had Richardson not prodded him up. So, whatever comes of it, the onor belongs clearly and of right to the gracious, graceful, skillful, capable leader of the house Democrats, Hon. James D. Richardson of Tennessee.

Later on Richardson, to borrow the felicitous language of Dr. William Everett of Massachusetts, "deposited the Republicans in a cavity" by introducing the following resolution:

Resolved, That this house views with deep inerest the heroic struggle of the republics of south Africa to maintain their independence and hereby tenders them our most profound sympathy in their unequal but gallant struggle.

That resolution went to the committee on foreign affairs, where it may or may not sleep. If it sleeps, Richardson and his friends will want to know. don't you know, who administers mor phine to it. If it does not sleep, Rich ardson reaps the glory.

Porto Rico Throttled.

The deed is done. For better or for worse the Porto Rican tariff bill, with the senate amendments, is now a law. Republican leaders are in doubt as to whether they have achieved a great party victory or digged the party's grave. It passed the house by eight majority, and we may now be said to have become part republic and part empire. It would appear that Pres political fortunes-not of my per sonal desires. As a matter of fact, 1 training for the role which he was to would not have Mark shot for any thing. Nor would I like to see him die a natural death. Indeed, if he were sick and none of his retainers and slaves would fetch him a doctor, 1 would do so myself. I regard him as the most valuable and forcible object lesson Democrats could possibly have in the impending campaign. He is worth 100,000 votes to us, perhaps 500,000. My prayer, therefore, is that he may be spared until the polls close on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Then, if the grim reaper should cut him down, my lachrymal fountains would not deplete themselves to any astonishing extent. Want Mark shot? Not by any manner of means. I would consider it as a great national calamity-as a sore personal bereavement-if he were taken now.

Richard P. Bland.

Speaking of Bland-and there is nothing better for a Democrat to speak of-I desire that my readers shall enjoy reading the eulogy pronounced by that big hearted Tammany brave, Amos J. Cummings, on the great Missourian. It is a gem. It is unique oratory. Here it is in full: "Mr. Speaker, as a representative of the toiling masses of the great metropolls of the nation I am here to pay tribute to the memory of one whom they recognized as their unfailing friend and benefactor.

"Mr. Speaker, a faithful sentinel of the people was Richard P. Bland. On guard night and day in the venal age of the republic, he never forgot the countersign of liberty and challenged all who approached her camp. He never sought relief from duty at freedom's outpost, and the grand rounds never found him asleep. Nor for an instant did he flinch from duty. Regardless of personal interests, he stood for the people at all times and in all places. Be the weather fair or foul, the glint of his musket was there.

"With him there was neither truce nor compromise with those who sought special privileges at the expense of the public. He was neither dismayed at the rapacity of greed nor appalled at the audacity of trusts. All his life was he a true disciple of Thomas Jefferson. 'Equal rights for all: special privileges for none,' was his motto. He fell battling for the rights of the masses, while exposing the snares of monopoly and defying the mercenary cohorts that threaten the life of the republic.

"Richard P. Bland had no parallel in this age. During his long stay in this house he had no fellow, no model, no likeness. In its shifting scenes he stood alone. Others might change; he never changed. Yet he was no block. no impediment, but an Intelligent force. steadily aiming at a goal the attainment of which he belleved to be a most wholesome achievement and the grist est benefit he could bestow upon his Country.

"A vital factor in our return to spacle payment after the war, he had restored to the people the dollar of their fathers. The Bland dollar was not fill. Born in Kentucky, every fiber of his body, every fliament of his brain, every scintillation of his intellect was American. "There was a hale about him at all times that forbadd either the charge or thought of selfishness. His life was a chapter of consistent and faultless logle. Oratory cannot adorn it; detraction cannot deface it.

"Sir, memory is a never fading mir ror. It reflects the scenes of other days. We who knew him can still see that modest but firm man rising here in his place, treading these aisles, stop ping to meet an inquiry, turning firmly to an attack, leading an onset, never beating a retreat.

"Richard P. Bland was a fitting type of the old time statesman, now, alas, fading away. He belonged to the generation that produced the founders of the republic. He had the true Revolutionary grit. He would have been a worthy colleague of Jefferson, Madison and Monroe. He was a builder, not a destroyer. He strove to pull down everything vicious in statesmanship and to raise everything wholesome to a common level.

"Whether on the floor, in committee or listening to chat in the cloakroom, he was essentially thoughtful. There was a rippling strain of humor about him, but his face never lost its cast of thoughtfulness. His friendship was sterling silver; his affection pure gold. Sir, I rejoice in my affiliation with such a man. It is better than gold and preclous stones. He left his imprint upon the legislation of this house. When the seeker after truth comes to study the great men who have shaped the destinies of the republic, he will find Richard P. Bland among the immortals. Future historians will linger o'er his name and gladly preserve his fame."

Webster Davis' Resignation.

The Boer agitation in this country is growing hot. In my judgment it is becoming so hot that the administration will be compelled to show its handand show it, willy nilly, for the Boers. Hon. Webster Davis' resignation of the assistant secretaryship of the interior to take to the lecture platform in behalf of old Paul Kruger and his brave burghers is only a straw which shows which way the wind is blowing. Davis is young. He has eloquence, brains and a future.

Even the poets are taking a hand. My friend Ripley D. Saunders of St. Louis has written the following beautiful poem, which I commend to all who see this letter:

THE BOER WOMEN.

Thou God upon whose name they call, These women of the burgher strain, Shall they in freedom's battles fail, Shall they in freecom a bart of the star Their sactifice in vain? True mothers of a freeborn racs. Daughters of mon in blood made free, Dear God of love and pitying grace, Are they not heard of thee?

And thou, O world, that seest the sight Unknown before to mortal ken, Still beats thy heart untroubled quite Within the breasts of men? The horror of it and the shame, Leaves it thy spirit calm and cold, McKinley, who, in his December message to congress, said it was our plain duty to establish free trade with Porto Rico, owes it to a long suffering and expectant world to explain, in a signed statement, just why he flopped. Flop may not be a classical word to apply to a presidential caper, but it is a good, old forcible monosyllable, which the great body of the people can comprehend without rummaging through an unabridged dictionary. Yes, flop is the word. Hon. Sereno E. Payne made a poor fist of showing why he flopped. Perhaps Brother McKinley could elucidate the subject more successfully and more skillfully.

The thing which appears to be desirable to a vast number of people is that the Democratic ticket shall be Bryan and Dewey. It is generally thought that they would win hands down. Asked if Dewey would accept second place. a prominent gentleman of large experience said: "Dewey's hatred of McKinley is so intense that he would do anything to defeat him for a second term." He also volunteered the information that General Nelson A. Miles and Admiral Winfield Scott Schley are exceedingly anxious to encompass the undoing and downfall of Mark Hanna's protege. That is certainly a distinguished trio to contend with-Dewey, Schley and Miles. Perhaps Mr. Mc-Kinley will conclude that it would have been just as well to have treated those great Americans with generosity and kindness.

Hanna Frying Fat.

Mark Hanna is beginning in dead earnest to fry the fat out of the trusts -that is, if the St. Louis Republic can be believed. The Republic makes the startling charge that Mark's preliminary assessment on the trusts is $6,-500,000! Only think of that, my countrymen? Six and one-half millions for a starter! If this is done in the green tree, what will be done in the dry? Mark has only one idea in politics, and that is to boodle somebody, and he is evidently fixing now to eclipse his great boodle campaign of 1896, when people stood aghast at the vast sums expended. So a virtuous senate committee reports unanimously that Senator Wilof corrupt methods used to secure his election. It will be a spectacle for men and angels to see such Republican tion when no fact in American history is more generally believed than that
