ROBERT HARDY'S SEVEN DAYS (Continued from Page 0.)

fives with a shock. Yet it seems possible that a man who lives very close to God every day might be so ready for everything that not even the most terrible catastrophe could make much difference to his plans for daily life, least of all deprive him of his reason, as it has so often done. Robert Hardy was just beginning to realize dimly that life is not one thing, but many things, and that its importance is the importance which belongs to the character of God himself.

He began to talk calmly with his wife concerning what he would do that day and was still tal'ing about it when James came in with a doctor, who at once went up stairs. He was just from the scene of the accident and bore marks of a hard night's work. His first glance at Clara was hard and professional, but as he looked he grew very grave, and an expression of serious surprise came over his weary face. He laid his hands on the girl's eyes and examined them, raised her hand and dropped it upon the bed again. Then, turning to the father and mother, he said gently:

"You must prepare yourselves for a terrible fact resulting from the accident to your daughter. She has suffered a shock that will probably rander her blind as long as she lives."

Mr. and Mrs. Hardy listened, pale faced and troubled. It was hard to think of the girl, so strong willed, so passionate and yet so capable of noble impulses and loving desires, as all her life shut up within the darkness thus It was bitter to think of this for her. What would it be to her when she awoke to the whole consciousness of 1t?

The doctor spoke again slowly: "There is another thing you ought to be prepared for. In rare cases like taiit happens sometimes that a loss of aring accompanies the loss of sight. ... en, after a pause: "And with the loss of sight and hearing it is possible daughter of the power of sparch. I do 7HE PROPOSED not know yet whether this has happened, but I prepare you for the worst."

"Blind and deaf and dumb!" murmured Mr. Hardy, while his wife sat down and buried her face in the bedclothes and sobbed. It seemed terrible to them.

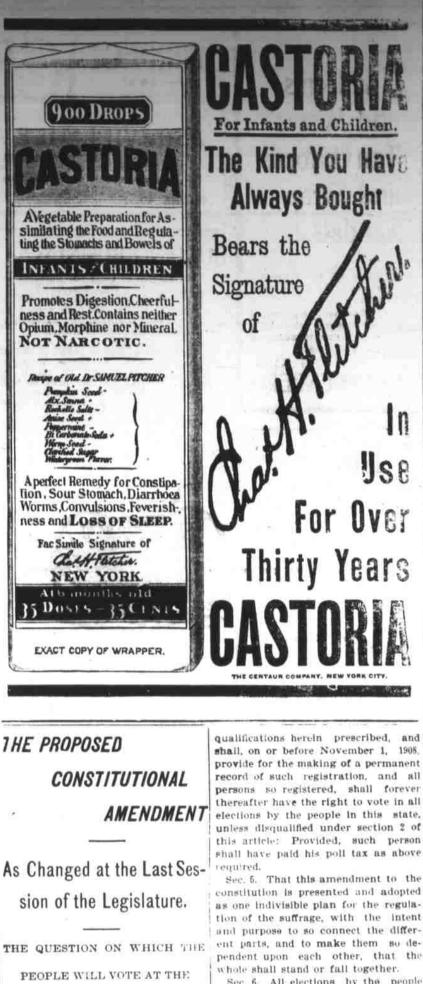

The doctor, after a little further examination, said nothing more could be done at present, gave directions for certain necessary treatment and departed after giving a look at Will and Bess and prescribing for them.

Mr. Hardy went down stairs and quietly told James all that the doctors had said. To a man living on the verge of eternity, as Mr. Hardy was, there was no time for evasions or the postponing of bad news or the utterance of soft speeches.

James took the news more calmly than Mr. Hardy thought he would. It was evident he did not realize all that was meant by It.

"Can you love Clara under these conditions?" asked Mr. Hardy, looking at James with a sympathy that the young man could not help feeling. "Yes, slr; more than ever. Why, is she not more in need of it than ever?" True, but what can you do with a
