

DEMOCRATS CONCENTRATE ON THE PRESIDENCY

If Bryan Wins He Will Carry the House With Him.

FIGHT IS NOT IN MIDDLE WEST ALONE, BUT ALL OVER THE COUNTRY.

Washington, July 20.—The managers of the Democratic campaign laugh at the Republican charge that they are taking no thought regarding the presidency, having given that up as lost in advance, and are concentrating their strength in an effort to carry the house and thereby cripple the Republican policy.

As a matter of fact the Democrats are concentrating on the presidency, giving only incidental attention to the house, knowing well, as they do, that if Bryan wins he will carry the house with him.

Nevertheless, the Democrats evidently do hope to make their greatest gains in the middle west. They think their chances are good in Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and even Ohio, in all of which the German vote is believed to have changed sides.

About two weeks ago, Dr. Habercorn announced not only the severance of his relations with the Republican party, but also his inability to support its platform and candidates in this campaign.

The principal reason he assigned was that Republicanism now stands for imperialism and that the time had come when every true American should fight for the republic against the empire.

Dr. Habercorn's correspondents tell him that they are well acquainted with his name by reason of the fact that most of the Republican literature which has reached them during the past campaigns has borne his signature as chief of the German literary bureau of the Republican national committee.

Dr. Habercorn, by the way, is not connected with the Democratic management in any capacity. This statement is pertinent in view of the repeated assertions made in Republican newspapers that he is now connected with the Democratic national congressional campaign committee.

But the Democrats hope also to carry New York, where they expect to secure harmony among all the factions and combined support of the national ticket. The state executive committee is made up of original Bryan men, of original anti-Bryan men and of all the opposing elements there are in the New York Democracy.

CRITTENDEN MARRIOTT. ANTE-BETROTHAL PRECAUTION. From the Chicago Evening Post.

Being a wise man, he desired to take no chances.

"Of course you understand," he said by way of preface, "that I have plenty of female relatives."

"Certainly," she answered, somewhat nonplussed.

"I have four sisters already," he went on, "and any number of cousins."

"I realize all that," she returned, "but I fail to see how it interests me."

"Only indirectly," he said. "Before saying what I have to say I merely desire to have it understood that I have my full quota of relatives of that description. Do I make myself clear?"

"I think I grasp your meaning," she answered.

"In that case," he announced, "I will ask you to be my wife."

TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF WM. H. WASHINGTON

FUNERAL SERVICES CONDUCTED BY REV. R. R. SPOWE, D. D.

The following is from a Philadelphia paper of recent date, referring to the funeral services over the remains of W. H. Washington, formerly of Asheville:

"Funeral services, which were attended by prominent Philadelphians, were held over the remains of William Herbert Washington yesterday in St. Stephen's Episcopal church, Tenth street, above Chestnut. The Rev. R. R. Spowe, D. D., of Baltimore, N. C., where Mr. Washington resided for several years, was the officiating clergyman, and he was assisted by the Rev. Joseph Lyons Miller and the Rev. S. E. Snively of St. Stephen's church. Interment was made at North Laurel Hill. The pall-bearers were Dr. Richard A. Cleaman, T. De Witt Cuyler, William M. Meigs, J. Rodman Paul, William Redwood Wright, W. Wilkins Carr, Drayton Burrell and George Burgevin of Pittsburgh."

Many will read with interest the following tribute which appeared in the Public Ledger of July 21, 1900:

"Many friends, and more especially his contemporaries of the Philadelphia bar and the members of the social circle of which he was a conspicuous ornament, will be grieved today upon hearing of the death of William Herbert Washington, in the prime of his manhood, at Castle Creek, in Arizona, a town he had gone for the benefit of his health. He belonged to a family which may truly be called, without exciting any invidious feeling in the breast of any man, the noblest in America, being a lineal descendant of Lawrence Washington, grandfather of George Washington. Yet Herbert Washington was a man of so much natural modesty that the writer, these lines, although for many years an intimate friend, does not remember to have ever heard him refer to his own origin, or to the celebrated family from which he was sprung. He had received a liberal education, and prepared himself for the profession, which he was passionately devoted to, although that few men have come to the bar with a more complete knowledge of the law, its beginnings, its principles, its growth and progress than he. No one who has read attentively for years his accurate and scholarly reports of the decisions of the courts made for the publication known as Weekly Notes of Cases, could have failed to see in them the evidences of his thorough intimacy with all the various branches of the English and American law. No man of late years had entered our profession more completely and thoroughly grounded in the principles of that profession than was young Herbert Washington. It is not to be doubted that had he lived his career would have been one of great distinction in his profession. But while as yet hardly fully entered upon the race, the state of his health compelled him to abandon his profession and to seek in travel and an out-of-doors existence the restoration of his failing strength. In the pursuit of this he took himself to an open-air life in the forests and fields and on the streams and water highways of his native land. He spent many summers in the great wilderness of northern Maine and Canada and many winters on the wild bayous and inlets of Louisiana, the Gulf of Mexico and the Florida rivers and coast line. Always an enthusiastic lover of nature, he became an ardent and skillful sportsman, bringing home with him many trophies of the chase and many memorials of the woods and waters in the midst of which the later years of his life were spent. But, alas! it was all in vain; it was too late, and the pursuing which was relentless fate, the shadow of which was often visible to his intimate friends, overtook him at last, and he has fallen while yet in the prime of his life, thus baffled and disappointed in the pursuit of what, without peradventure, would have been a most distinguished and useful career to him."

"Herbert Washington was a man of fine literary tastes and accomplishments, a man of the most gentle and generous nature and refinement of feeling. I will only add now that his life was as pure and blameless as his character was admirable, and that he was a consistent member of the Protestant Episcopal church, in the affairs of which he was always greatly interested. In the social circle in which his brief life was passed he was greatly beloved and always a great favorite. He has breathed his last, far from his home and the friends who were so deeply attached to him, in the arid wastes of Arizona, but he has left a record which, though brief, is filled with sweet and delightful memories."
