"Say!" the man who had never before attended a concert remarked, "who's the feller wavin' the little stick?"

"Sh!" replied his neighbor, "that's the conductor of music."

"Oh! and is the feller with the horn the motorman?"—Philadelphia Press.

The greatest surprise I ever experienced in the unexpected appearance of a wild creature in the heart of the metropolis, was one day in the spring of 1901, when I saw a 'possum crossing Broadway near Chambers street. The creature had no chance; I think it was a truck that killed it; and a great crowd gathered, stopping traffic, excitedly discussing the tragedy. The majority declared the animal to be a rat; the minority maintained that it was a guinea-pig. Then as the police interrupted discussion by clearing the car-tracks, a large negro dropped from the back of a truck, seized the animal, and mounting the cart tall once more, held his prize aloft, grinning from ear to ear. "Passer 'possum," he said, and pocketed the future piece de resistance. I have never learned where that 'possum came from; but there's no doubt where he went. Ducks, geese, snipe, and gulls, pass over in their migrations, and it is not uncommon to catch a glimpse of hawks hanging high above the city smoke.

Once I saw a man who had been on the...

Harry was a near-boy, of course, but—well, he certainly had his faults. What made him so late tonight, for instance? Surely he hadn't gone off again to play chess with that horrid Bob Jollibois, as he did only the other week.

But, no, he wouldn't be so selfish and horrid when he knew perfectly well how unhappy it would make her. She had told him so when he came home at 8.30 o'clock the other night, and he had vowed never to do it again.

Harry was a man of his word; she would say that for him. He had promised before they were married to give up that hateful volunteering and football that always took up so much of his time, and he had kept his promises so far, though she was quite sure Bob Jollibois and the others were doing their best to tempt him to break it.

What was keeping him this evening? She had never felt quite easy in her mind since she found out that Harry was still a member of the Jackday club. He had agreed with her when she declared that a married man with

The importance of West Point in the Revolution was due to its command of the Hudson river, then the thoroughfare for freight and passenger traffic between the seaboard and the interior. Early in 1775 the provincial congress, pursuant to the wishes of the continental congress, resolved to fortify the highlands, and sent commissioners, accompanied by Colonel Bernard Romans, with 24 men, to execute its plans. Romans was a willful choleric Hollander, an engineer by profession and an employe of the British Crown. He constructed the fortifications on Constitution Island (then Martelaed's Rock), but in such an unscientific manner as to invite the strictures of the most capable experts of his own profession. For this reason, and also because of a report by a special commission of inspection, made to congress on November 23, 1775, that the works could be assailed from the higher ground across the river without any danger to the enemy, it was planned to occupy and fortify West Point, but the proposition was not followed, and "the key to the passage of the Highlands temporarily fell into the hands of the enemy."
