

THE FRANKLIN PRESS SUPPLEMENT.

FRANKLIN, N. C., WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1906.

A New Kind of Kissing Bug.

Among the visitors here last week from the West was a man who wore no whiskers about his mouth or on his chin—only allowed them to grow on his neck and around the edge of his face and no moustache at all, causing the gentleman to look a little odd. In reply to the question of why he went so odd, stated that he was a preacher and belonged to some kind of a church that required both sexes of this church to kiss each other only, and all whiskers were cut from about the mouths of the males so there would be no obstruction on the lips whatever. We did not learn how many members belonged to his church but suppose they are few in number. We would not belong to anything that would prevent us from kissing a sister occasionally. It is useless to say that the stranger came and left without receiving a single kiss.—Dahlonaga (Ga.) Nugget.

The editor sat in his office whence all but him had fled, and he wished that every dead-beat was in his grave—stone dead. His mind then wandered far away to the time when he should die, and his royal editorial soul go scooting to the sky, when he'd roam the fields of paradise and sail o'er Jasper seas, and all things glorious would combine his every sense to please. He thought how, then, he'd look across the great gulf dark and drear, that'll yawn between his happy soul and those who swindled here, and when for water they would call in agony they'd caper, he'd shout to them: "Just quench your thirst with the due that's on your paper."—Ex.

There are times in the life of every man when he longs to be absolutely free; free to roam at will over grassy plain or wooded hill, on the mountains, in the valleys; he longs to see the sights of which he has read, to explore the unexplored; he is tempted to tear himself loose from all ties and lose himself in this vast country of ours for a brief time.—Ex.
