Your contract specifies how the roads shall be kept, and of course we will not expect anything more. C. W. TEAGUE, Macon County Road Sup. 1tp

HARRIS IS GUEST OF PURINA MILL

Attends Atlanta Gathering With Three Other Franklin Men

Last week the editor of The Press was invited to be a guest of the Ralston and Purina feed mills in Atlanta. The mills have headquarters in St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. Harris accepted the invitation, and reports that an enjoyable as well as an instructive period was spent by himself and over 600 other men, made up mostly of dealers and salesmen of the company. Messrs. Sam and J. D. Franks and Henry West were the other representatives from Franklin who were in attendance at the convention.

There was on display all the check-board products from mule feed on up or down to rabbit chow. There was feed for every kind of livestock and feed for every kind of performance of every kind of livestock, depending on whether or not the animal was on full work or light work or no work at all. There was feed that needed certain home grown ingredients added to make it a balanced ration, and there were feeds complete in themselves. Every kind of food on display was made according to the best proven formulae known. These were not only figured for the best results to be had from a nutrition standpoint, but also from the standpoint of whether or not they would prove profitable from a money standpoint and also from the standpoint of the health of the animal.

Was Skeptical

The editor says that he went to this convention with a very skeptical mind as to whether or not he approved of commercial feeds being offered to our people here in this section. He says that after he had listened through two days of the convention, including the whole scheme of the food question from the purely business side on up through the service part, that a firm that puts out four square feed is rendering the users of that feed a real service. He believes that there is reliance to be put in a commercially mixed feed honestly represented and honestly handled. He says that where a person has to hire labor or buy feed or both, he believes that while Purina may not be any better than all others that it will stand as hard a test as the best of them.

The editor said that in this day and time when hired labor cannot be had, that it is part of sound business, in his estimation, when the farmer can get ready mixed feeds of known reliability, to buy them in place of the hired man. This will give the farmer more time himself for other work. Mr. Harris advises farmers to buy feeds only after the home grown feeds have been exhausted or to supplement them in case there are not enough of the right kinds on hand to make a balanced ration; for a balanced ration is the only profitable ration.

Mr. Harris says that were the farmer to figure on his feeding business as well and as closely as the men he spent two days with, at this convention, that there would be no farm problem. It seems funny, he says, that others really know more about the feeding of livestock than the man that is doing the feeding; this because one man thought enough of his job to study the right way to do it and the other was more or less indifferent.

KAY JOHNSON and CHARLES BICKFORD in "DYNAMITE"

Noted Director Worked A Year on First Talking Film

"Dynamite," Cecil B. De Mille's first talking production which comes next Monday and Tuesday to the Macon theatre, stands out as a triumphant return to the mode and startling dramatic structure of "Male and Female" and "Manslaughter."

More important than any other De Mille production of its type, "Dynamite" is said to have been a year under way. The results more than justify the time expenditure. The picture is intensely colorful, packed with glamour and thrills, and leading up to one of the most thrilling climaxes ever devised for any photograph.

It is scarcely fair to reveal the basic theme on which "Dynamite" is based, because it is so strikingly different from any other picture plot that patrons have a right to get the whole story as a surprise on visiting the theatre. It is sufficient to say that the story deals with a young society girl and her relationship to a polo-playing dilettante and a stalwart, two-fisted coal miner. The climactic scenes, which are said to have taken six weeks to make, occur in a mine a thousand feet under the earth.

Charles Bickford as the coal miner, Kay Johnson as the society girl, Cynthia Crothers, and the redoubtable Conrad Nagel in the part of the dilettante, contribute some of the best performances the talking screen—or the silent—has ever seen. Bickford and Miss Johnson came to the coast from the Broadway stage, and it is to be hoped that Hollywood will see much more of them. The balance of the cast, including Julia Faye and Robert Edson, is uniformly good and deserves a special plaudit.

"Dynamite" is packed with what its title indicates. It not only has something to interest every type of picturegoer, but it supplies a mass effect that is startling and absorbing. It is unquestionably one of De Mille's greatest efforts and as exciting a two hours in the theatre as you are likely to experience this season.
