

New Winter Pea Is Good Soil Builder

The Austrian Winter pea, introduced into North Carolina in the last two or three years, is the equal of any other winter legume as a soil builder.

"This is the indication we must accept from a series of demonstrations conducted on the farm of H. W. Bullard of Orrum, Robeson county," says Enos C. Blair, extension agronomist at State College. "In October 1929, Mr. Bullard planted plots of Austrian Winter peas, hairy vetch, crimson clover, and barley side by side on a uniform piece of soil. In April, 1930, all of these crops had made good growth and were turned under in preparing the land for corn. The hairy, being a non-leguminous plant, was used as a check to learn of the effect of the legumes."

The results were very interesting, says Mr. Blair. The corn grown on the different plots was recently harvested and weighed showing the yield after hairy to be 30 bushels an acre. The yield following the hairy vetch was 39 bushels an acre; the yield following the crimson clover was 42 bushels and that after the Austrian Winter peas was 42 bushels an acre. In other words, the plowing under of hairy vetch increased the yield of corn by nine bushels, while plowing under the crimson clover and the Austrian peas increased it by 12 bushels each.

From the results of these demonstrations, farmers may rely as confidently on the Austrian peas as they have on the older, well known winter legumes which have been popular for so many years, Mr. Blair says. The yields on none of the plots were as high as they might have been due to the extremely dry season in that territory this summer.

The death angel came and took one of our best young ladies, Mrs. Lillie Smith Ramsey Wednesday at 11:30 p. m. Mrs. Ramsey was the youngest daughter of Mrs. J. L. Smith. She had been afflicted several months and her death came as no surprise to her many friends and relatives.

Her baby died about a month ago. Mrs. Ramsey was a member of the Baptist church, professing faith in Christ at an early age and lived faithful up to the time of her death. She was active in religious worship which leaves evidence and no doubt in our minds that she is at rest. She leaves a husband, Floyd Ramsey, a daughter, Beatrice, about 2 years old, a father, J. L. Smith, seven brothers, Jud, of Tellico; Pearson, of South Carolina; Sanford and Ervin, of Iota; Charlie, Arlin and Leonard, of Tellico; a host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss.

Talking Monkeys To Be Seen At Macon Theatre

Something New in Amusement Field

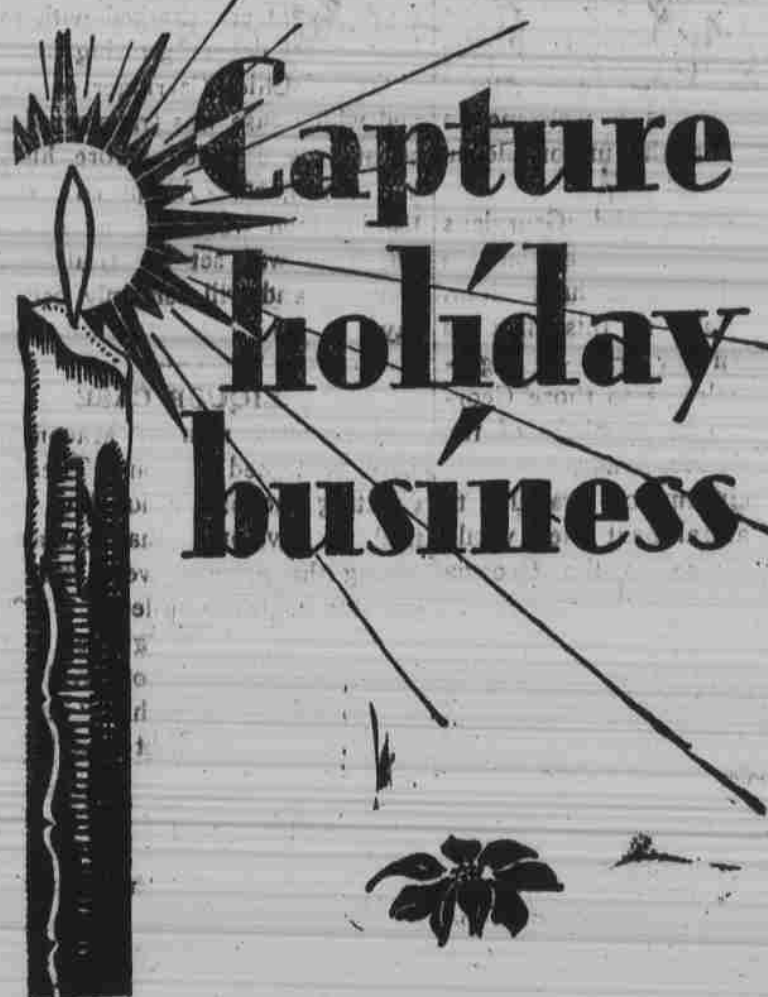

Manager Lyle of the Macon Theatre announces that he has for showing at the local playhouse Wednesday and Thursday of next week The Tiffany Chimps, a group of real live monkeys that are being cast in a series of hilarious two reel comedies. The comedy to be shown next week is entitled THE BLIMP MYSTERY, and the entire action is carried by the trained monkeys. There is a distinct plot, with a hero, heroine, a villain, fights, thrills, a runaway blimp, and a thousand comedy situations. The monkeys talk, dress and act just like humans. Wherever these comedies have been shown they have been the surprise hit of the industry, and have created more favorable comment than Metro's talking dogs. Children especially will enjoy this feature, and in order that every child in Franklin may have an opportunity to see this unusual attraction Manager Lyle has announced that he will stage a matinee Thanksgiving afternoon at 3:00 o'clock showing the Tiffany Chimps and an outstanding feature picture, THE SQUEALER, starring Jack Holt.
