Zane Grey's First All Talking "Western" At Macon Theatre

As Buck Duane, outlaw by circumstance, George O'Brien spurns fate and man-made terrors for a woman's smile in "The Lone Star Ranger," Fox Movietone all talking romance, adapted from Zane Grey's widely read novel, which opens at the Macon theatre to-night.

Sue Carol, who portrays the feminine lead, furnishes the heart appeal, and the combination of O'Brien, Grey and Miss Carol is a happy one. It provides a distinct treat in the first real "Western" to be transferred to the audible screen.

Few pictures ever made, silent or all talking, ever presented many action and entrancing a romance. The story deals with the stirring adventures of the daring Texas Rangers in the days when the West was wild and woolly. A delightful love story threads its way through the unfolding of the plot and the climax is simply immense.

The title role was made for O'Brien and he gives one of the best performances of his career, which is saying a great deal when one recalls his various successes.

Supporting the principals are several prominent actors, notably Walter McGrail, Warren Hymer and Elizabeth Patterson. A. F. Erickson's direction is sure and finished.
