

SCHOOL TEACHER TURNS DETECTIVE

In the pioneering days of old school teachers had to meet many unusual situations. Tho' the pioneering days are over, there comes once in a while an occasion in the lives of some of our mountain school teachers, situations where they are called upon to meet the extraordinary. Miss Grace Carpenter, who teaches at Otter Creek school over near Flats turned detective a few days ago as the following report indicates:

Last Thursday while Miss Carpenter was at her school some one entered her boarding house by a back bed room window and made a get away with clothing, money and a pistol. She went to the post master and reported the facts. With him she turned detective and began to question certain individuals and doing other things that seemed to show that the guilty party was known. In a couple of hours a very scared mountain youth with lanky and uncouth appearance, so the story goes, came to Miss Carpenter and said that he heard she had been robbed. He thought that he might sound out a couple of bad boys that he knew and would in all probability get some trace of the stolen goods. He was told to proceed with his sluthing. Very shortly he returned with the stolen articles and reported that the boys he thought knew something about them helped him go to some other boys on whom they found the stolen articles—all but the clothes. He and his friends took the things away from the culprits and brought them safely to their rightful owner as honest boys should.
