ULTRA-SMART MOVIE COMING

'Sin Takes a Holiday' To Be At Macon Theatre Next Week

Produced with highly elaborate settings, the story universally appealing, and every role played by a thorough stage and screen artist, Constance Bennett's new Pathe dialogue picture, "Sin Takes a Holiday," doubtless will be hailed as the ultra-smart screen production of the year. Not unlike "Holiday" in the lavishness of its scenic investiture, and reminiscent in some respects of "This Thing Called Love" in which Miss Bennett achieved remarkable distinction, her latest stellar vehicle, admirably directed by Paul L. Stein, who filmed "This Thing Called Love" and "One Romantic Night" so cleverly, presents this talented and popular star in the most fascinating role she has ever essayed.

"Sin Takes a Holiday" is a rare gem in the field of motion picture play construction. It is a scintillating comedy drama played against a background of New York social life, Paris gaiety and the brilliance of famous European resorts. The story is simple, the treatment of the theme thorough, the costuming superb and the general effect as delightful as it is convincing. The story was written by Robert Milton and Dorothy Cairns, while the dialogue was written by Horace Jackson who wrote the dialogue for "Paris Bound," "Holiday" and other screen hits.

Shownmen will find this Constance Bennett stellar production one of supreme merit. With its supporting cast including such stage artists as Kenneth MacKenna, Basil Rathbone, Lita La Roy, Louis Bartels, Zasu Pitts, John Roche, Kendall Lee, Murrel Finley, Helen Johnson and Fred Walton, "Sin Takes a Holiday" is a box office attraction which the public and exhibitors alike will heartily appreciate.

"Sin Takes a Holiday" will be at the Macon theatre Wednesday and Thursday of next week.
