LET'S COMPLETE THE JOB

The current drive for Red Cross funds in Jackson county is lagging dismally . . . something that has not happend before . . . and should not happen now. The need for Red Cross work is just about as great as it was during the war. The organization is still helping many veterans their families, men in service, and answering the call for help from many other sources. Jackson's quota isn't large this year, only $2,118 and should be well over-subscribed. Let's get behind Chairman Dills and his co-workers and put the drive over in the usual Jackson county manner of more than meeting our quota.

BUY EASTER SEALS

Those bright little Easter seals are now on sale in Jackson county and everyone is urged to buy as many as possible as the funds derived from the annual seal sales is for a most worthy cause, that of helping restore strength and usefulness to the weak and useless limbs of little children.

This is the 12th year the North Carolina League for Crippled Children has held the seal sales which is always at the Easter season. This year the campaign is from March 6 through April 6. Jackson county is late getting started and Dr. Harold McGurie, county chairman, urges everyone to respond immediately in order to complete the drive by April 6.

Some of the many uses this money is put to is: Medical care, artificial aids, transportation, education, financial assistance, prevention, and other services. Fifty per cent of the local sales money remains in Jackson county for work in citizen can make some small contributhe local crippled children's clinic.

When you buy a seal, think of the happiness it may bring to some unfortunate that steadies the home and family ties, then buy more.

WHERE DOES OUR TIMBER GO?

The nation is looking to the South to continue producing one half and more of the total pulpwood consumed in the United States. In 1944 this amounted to nearly 7 1-2 million cords and in 1946 easily 8 million cords.

A lot of wood; yet, but only 9 per cent a new bride is let loose in one. of the total drain on living timber in the South, according to information by H. J. Malsberger, Forester, Southern Pulpwood Conservation Association. This surprises many people because they think the pulp and paper industry is responsible for a majority of the wood cut from our forests.

Lumber, a forest product of tremen- size? dous importance to our economy, uses 44 per cent. Fuelwood, which never makes the headlines as an essential commodity. causes a drain of 18 per cent. This is usually cut from about the same size and quality timber as pulpwood and consumes twice as much.

The people in the United States are the largest consumers of paper products in the world, averaging over 300 pounds per person per year. Trees are cut for pulpwood and converted into paper products to meet this demand.

wood industry could draw its annual sup- they weren't-in their case saber-toothply of wood each year and every year ed tiger instead of the First of the Month. thereafter from 20 to 25 million acres of Southern forests, as a conservative estimate, if those acres were well stocked. timber properly cut, and adequately protected from fire. There are about 167 million acres of forest land in private ownership in this territory.

Look at the fire record as depicted in the leaflet-"Where Does Our Timber Go?"-prepared and distributed by the Southern Pulpwood Conservation Association in the interest of growing and protecting our forest resource. Fifty per cent more wood lost by fire, insects, disease, etc. than, as an example, is consumed by the entire pulp and paper industry in the South in one year. Such loss to the forest and to the public in usable products made from wood has been going on for years. The public is responsible for nine out of ten forest fires. A job needs to be done to stop the fires if we are to have growing crops of trees and if people are to have available the needed articles made from wood.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT CRIME?

Crime in 1946, says J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the FBI, hit a ten-year peak. That means it came much too near the all-time high. How are Americans going to react to this news?

There are three typical responses to such a crisis—for crisis it is. All three are wrong; all three are futile.

There is the hand-folding reaction ("Oh, well, this will pass; let's get back to normal business.") ...

There is the hand-wringing reaction ("What can we do? The problem is so vast. Where can we take hold of it?")

And there is the get-tough reaction ("Jail 'em all; treat 'em rough: parole nobody; hang the worst.")

Vast and complex as it unquestionably is, the problem of crime breaks down into poward to it with a great expecthree understandable parts. Each can be attacked by methods already well-developed. Crime can at least be diminished in human society.

The first part is negative; but it is the first essential. It is the problem of securi- trees seem to follow its move- weary and questioning world new ty and control. Police can be on guard. ments. The secular ture joins with man in proclaimkept out of circulation. Why isn't this be- calendar they seem to ignore. ing done effectively? Mr. Hoover gives one reason: Law enforcement agencies still do not have adequate trained personnel.

The second part of the problem is that of reform. And the question and answers are somewhat the same. Prisons are overcrowded and understaffed. Parole officers have too many parolees to look after.

The third aspect is that of prevention. Mr. Hoover gives two pertinent reasons for the current rise in crime: The social dislocations and disorganizations of war have not yet run their course. And "the gradual breakdown" of the American home is being reflected in national behavior.

Here the vastness and complexity of the problem do seem appalling. But every tion toward a national answer: Anything that builds up neighborliness, anything whatever helps to stabilize the means of livelihood, all that lessens fear, cancels cynicism, and offers hope—all these fight crime where it starts.

Anyone who will can get into this fight, just in his daily life.
