

STATE COLLEGE HINTS TO FARM HOMEMAKER

By VERA STANTON
Assistant State Agent

It's an old household custom to pour on milk when ink is spilled. But textile chemists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture advise other methods which are easier and more successful. Milk may remove ink stains but it usually takes long soaking, and sometimes it leaves a spot more difficult to remove than ink.

Writing inks differ so much in composition that no one remover suits all. What removes one kind of ink may set another. The washable, non-permanent inks, often used in schools, will come out by rinsing in water and then soaking in soapsuds, but soap will set iron tannate inks. It is best to try several methods, beginning with the simplest and the one least likely to harm the cloth. Prompt treatment while the ink is still fresh and moist is important, because some inks become darker and insoluble as they stand and dry.

As soon as ink is spilled, spread cornmeal, cornstarch or talcum powder on the stain to absorb as much as possible and keep it from spreading. As the powder shows color, shake it off and shake on fresh until no more ink is taken up. Then, pour either glycerine or one of the soapless shampoos on the fresh stain. Rub lightly between the hands, rinse and apply

Upon arrival overseas he was assigned to Service Battery of the 11th Field Artillery Battalion, a unit of the 24th Division Artillery. Cooper, son of Mrs. C. Cooper, Route 5, Sanford, N. more as long as any ink comes from the stain. Finally, rinse with clear water.

If traces of color still show, try lemon juice or citric acid powder. Other bleaches may be used on white fabrics, but on colored material they must be used sparingly with great care. After using any bleach, rinse it out thoroughly with water.

Removing ink from fabric that is not washable is difficult or impossible by home methods. If the fabric is injured by water, it is already harmed by the water in the ink. Ordinary "cleaning fluids" or dry-cleaning solvents
