Deans, Jr., of the school's English department, visited the Smoky Mountain National Park museum Thursday afternoon as the guests of Arthur Stupka, park naturalist. In their visit to the museum, containing Indian and pioneer artifacts and household and kitchen articles of bygone days, the party were especially interested in looking over the effects of the late Harace Kephart, prominent southern author, and the late George Massa, noted Japanese-American photographer. These effects were recently turned over to the museum by President Bird and Mrs. Buchanan, their custodians until the transfer. President Bird said that they were highly pleased with the temporary housing provided for the effects, and were looking forward to the time when a regional museum building will be made available by the government to take care of the collections made by Park officials and interested friends.
