EAT MORE POTATOES
HOME AGENT ADVISES

Home agents are urging consumers to eat more potatoes this summer. Miss Mary Johnston, home demonstration agent for the State College Extension Service, said this week.

STATE COLLEGE ANSWERS TIMELY FARM QUESTIONS

QUESTION — What should a good ration provide for turkeys?
ANSWER — A clean place to grow where they will not pick up disease; an abundance of tender succulent growing at all times; protection against thieves and predatory animals; a constant supply of clean, cool water; ample clean, fresh feed; and plenty of shade.

She emphasized the three-fold reason for this advice. First, intermediate crop Irish potatoes are more plentiful now—and until about mid-September—than at any other time this year; second, they are a highly nutritious, energy-building food; and third, they are relatively cheaper than the less abundant foods.

"Moreover," the home agent pointed out, "Irish potatoes are a universal favorite and are one of the most versatile of all foods. They can be prepared in enough different ways to permit serving them at every meal without tiring repetition."

As for nutrition, potatoes contain vitamin C and important minerals, as well as limited amounts of protein. They provide more food energy for the money than any other vegetable, and at the same time are no more fattening than many other foods.

Miss Johnston urged housewives to take full advantage of the present abundance of potatoes, and to serve them more often.

BULLETIN READY ON GARDEN INSECTS

A new 20-page bulletin containing descriptions and full-color pictures of common garden insects in North Carolina has just been published by the State College Extension Service and is now available for distribution.

Entitled "Vegetable Insect Control in North Carolina," the publication promises to be one of the most popular ever issued by the Extension Service. It contains control measures for 28 of the insects most commonly found in Tar Heel gardens. Among the useful features of the bulletin are two easy-to-read tables, one listing the main garden crops and the insects which attack each, and the other giving directions for mixing various chemical insecticides.

Among the insects pictured in their natural colors are the squash bug, tomato hornworm, striped cucumber beetle, Mexican bean beetle, harlequin cabbage bug, Colorado potato beetle, cutworm, corn earworm, and cabbage worm.

James T. Conner, Jr., Extension entomologist, who prepared the bulletin, emphasizes the place of cultural control measures in fighting insects.

"Practice clean cultivation," he advises. "Destroy hibernating places of insects, by deep spading or plowing when preparing the seedbed. Destroy weeds and grasses which may serve as hibernating or breeding places for harmful insects."

Copies of the publication may be obtained free by writing to the Agricultural Editor, State College Station, Raleigh, and asking for Extension Circular No. 313.

The Haywood County Farm and Home Field Day attracted a large group of farmers and farm women this year.

grain meets the necessary grade requirements, the grain stored is eligible for a CCC loan and will help make price supports more effective.

QUESTION — Why should North Carolina grow more grain and other feed crops?
ANSWER — There are several reasons: (1) Feed production at present is far from adequate. About 600,000 tons of commercial mixed feeds are shipped into the State annually. (2) Improved practices have increased yields and profits. (3) Feed crops such as legumes and corn are complementary. That is, legumes add nitrogen to the soil, making possible greater corn yields. (4) Since feed crops may be sold as cash crops or fed to livestock, depending on market conditions, there is a minimum of risk involved.

QUESTION — When should the poultry laying house be prepared for winter use?
ANSWER — There is no better time than right now, while the weather is favorable. If postponed until winter weather sets in, these jobs often often go undone. The first step should be to give the laying house a good cleaning.
