By FELIX PICKLESIMER

I would like to take this opportunity, in behalf of the Jackson County Chamber of Commerce, to express my gratitude to each business firm, groups and individuals who have helped to make possible this welcome advanced to the North Carolina Association of Chamber of Commerce Executives.

I would also like to acknowledge the following groups who have contributed their whole-hearted support to the Jackson County Chamber of Commerce in making possible the fine program of entertainment worked out for the enjoyment of our visitors: Tatem's Sky Club, buffet supper; Hotel Carolina, registration headquarters.

Do try the many different flavoring herbs and seasonings, that are available in stores today. Why not use caraway seeds in the cottage cheese or a dash of clove in the Harvard beets? You can buy herb vinegars, too, or make them from herbs from your own garden or from those you buy. They're a convenient way to add herbs to salad dressings and other dishes using vinegar.

Food experts say try new taste adventure, with flavors—mint in cream dressing for a fruit salad; drops of lime over your fruit cup or in cola beverages; peppermint in your chocolate sauce; strawberry in custards. Put a delightful pungent touch into cookies and cakes, with anise and almond flavorings, or in gingerbread with an Sylva Herald and staff, Special Welcome Edition of Herald.

Jackson County and Town of Sylva officials for assistance in helping to make this convention possible.

We feel that those attending this convention will return to their home with a greater respect and admiration for Western North Carolina and this scenic wonderland and for the entertainment they will have enjoyed in Jackson county.

We regret that there will be some of the members unable to attend this convention but we feel that this edition of The Sylva Herald, a copy of which is being mailed to each Chamber of Commerce in the State, will give them an idea of the many advantages and opportunities this section of North Carolina has to offer.

orange flavoring. Spice any of your apple dishes with cinnamon.

When you use herbs, especially dried herbs, use them with a light hand. Herb flavors are lost through cooking. So add them to stews, soups and pot roasts, about a half-hour before cooking is finished. You'll find that you can draw out and extend the flavor of the oils in herbs better by adding the herbs to fat. Home economists recommend using herbs in the following ways:

Serve cooked string beans or pas mixed with chopped chives, or with a dash of garlic salt or rosemary.

Try basil or bay leaves with tomatoes.

Dill seeds and caraway seed, pep up cabbage dishes.

Put a few whole cloves in creamed onions.

Try tarragon vinegar for beets.

For a change from everyday mashed potatoes, add a little chopped chives or parsley.

A dash of rosemary makes that
