The Antediluvian Teacher

The one thing superintendents, principals and teachers in some schools hate worse than physical education is having parents coming around with grievances or complaints against medical methods. The writer is a parent and a doctor and he recently found it necessary to call on the public school principal to learn why no recesses were given the children—no outdoor recesses. On the day of this particular visit the weather was ideal, though a bit cold. But the ground was still damp from previous rains. It was immediately after noon intermission, and all the school children had played about the yard in the noon hour while waiting for the bell to ring.

The principal of the school in question is a typical mollycoddle. Always has some slight cough or "cold" and always nursing it. He was a bit flabbergasted at the suddenness and vehemence of our inquiry. He finally explained that there had been no recesses for some weeks back because of bad weather. "Had we allowed a recess this forenoon, for instance, many of the children would have gotten their feet wet in the yard and probably their parents would have complained to us about it." The same parents, you see, would have no possible objection to the children getting their feet wet at the noon hour. This was carefully pointed out to the principal. He was also advised that the school board rules called for outdoor recess morning and afternoon when the weather was suitable, and that unless this recess was regularly given it would be our painful duty to bring a complaint against the principal, in the interest of the health of the children. No recesses were given for another week of fine weather. So we took the matter to the superintendent of schools, who, being a fairly human being, immediately recognized the propriety of the complaint and censured the principal in question for his bad stewardship. After that, recess became a living institution in that school. All this trouble is worth while, the parent values the health of his children. So-called "colds," such as tonsillitis, adenoids, enlarged tonsils, as well as anemia, nervousness, bed wetting, chorea (St. Vitus' dance), and many other conditions of school children are certainly invited by prolonged confinement in the warm atmosphere and the strict discipline of the average schoolroom. It is up to the parents to see that a regular fifteen minutes of recreation, exercise and release from restraint—so hard for the child's naturally active nervous system—are forthcoming in every school, and to protest promptly and vigorously when an antediluvian teacher essays to repeal this ancient, wise and indispensable provision for the physical welfare of the child.

Question and Answers.

Perispiring Feet.
 W. W. R.—What is good for perispiring feet?
 Answer: Tepid foot bath each midday, and change of stockings, also of shoes if possible, at that time. When feet are dried, apply an alcoholic solution of salicylic acid, one ounce in the pint, or a water solution of official formaldehyde liquid, one ounce in the pint. Dry. Dust over with boric acid powder, or talcum powder.

Alum in the Biscuits.
 Dr. K. M.—Kindly advise me if baking powder containing alum is injurious to health.
 Answer: If the biscuits are good we eat them, and we never trouble to inquire about the infinitesimal quantity of alum they might contain. We think that idea belongs with the notion that good tea or coffee is not healthful.

LAMB FOR RED CROSS

A. C. Walker announced to The Mountaineer-Courier Saturday that in July he is going to bring to Waynesville the choice of his lambs and present it to the Red Cross Chapter here to be auctioned off to the highest bidder.

This suggests the idea: Why not a large Red Cross auction of stock and other goods donated? Such auctions have been held elsewhere with tremendous success. Usually fabulous prices are paid for all such donated articles. At once such sale in Nebraska, the auctioneer ran out of things to sell long before the demand was satisfied, so he put the moon up for sale and it bought $200. He spied a farmer in the crowd who had an unusually luxurious bunch of whiskers and the auctioneer sold his whiskers for $20.

TOTAL SOLAR ECLIPSE

On the afternoon of Saturday, June 8, 1918, the wonderful spectacle of a total solar eclipse will be visible, weather permitting, over a track extending from the Pacific (Washington) to the Atlantic (Florida). This track of the moon's shadow is 70 miles wide at the western coast, narrowing to 40 miles in Florida.

For about an hour the moon will gradually encroach upon the sun's disk, the daylight will fade, then the narrowing crescent of the sun will suddenly disappear, and around the jet-black ball of the moon, hanging in the northwestern sky among the brighter stars, will be seen the pearly radiance of the mysterious solar corona. The remarkable spectacle may be enjoyed for 122 seconds at the western coast, and for half that time in Florida. Then the crescent of the sun will appear on the other (western) side of the moon, and after another hour the full disk of the sun will shine as usual.

This event happens at any one place, on the average, only three times in a thousand years.

The gaseous envelopes of the sun can be advantageously studied by astronomers during the brief interval of total eclipse, and it is then only that the corona can be observed. It is estimated that there are only about 90 minutes in a century for the investigation of this interesting but still perplexing outer appendage of the sun. Its shape is not constant, but varies with the 11-year cycle of the sun's activity in producing sun-spots. Sun-spots are now about at their maximum, and accordingly we may expect a corona with streamers distributed in all directions around the sun, but not so widely extended east and west as in 1900. The streamers issuing from near the sun's poles suggest somewhat certain appearances of the aurora borealis.

The light of the corona is partly reflected sunlight and partly radiation due to the intense heat it receives from the sun. But the most interesting part is due to an unknown gas, called coronium, which has not yet been found in the earth or in the spectrum of any other sun. For this section of North Carolina, there will be only a partial eclipse.
