Why cannot we share our wealth with many others, who in the grandeur with which God has endowed us, may receive for their bodies and minds the rest and peace that they need.

BASE-BALL

Last Saturday a most interesting game of ball was played on the Island between Marshall and Mars Hill. The town boys did themselves proud in defeating their old antagonists of last year. Craigmiles was the pitcher for the home team and Freeman the catcher.

There was a little dispute at the end of the game which marred what was otherwise a fine game.

Marshall has been doing fine work this year and we hope they may continue to gain victories for the town.

Every one should support our home team and make the boys feel that we are back of them. Good clean base ball is a recreation that we all should take a part in.

The final score was 8 to 3 in favor of Marshall.

Ed Gilbert was the umpire.

John B. Station, Joyon, Ky., had an exceptionally severe attack of whooping cough. He says: "If it had not been for Foley's Honey and Tar Compound I would have been compelled to quit work. Instead, I never missed a day, and Foley's Honey and Tar Compound gave me instant relief and is the only cough medicine we ever use." Contains no opiates. I. E. Burnett, Mars Hill N. C.

Democratic Convention.

The Democrats met in convention last Saturday and elected delegates to the different State and district conventions.

Every township was represented. Mr. T. N. James called the meeting to order. J. R. Sams was made permanent chairman and E. Zeph Ray was elected Secretary.

The convention unanimously endorsed Locke Craig for Governor and Judges Hoke and Brown for Judges of Supreme court and Frank Carter for Judge of Superior court. Hon. E. Y. Webb was endorsed for Congressman.

The convention named the following delegates for all the States Congressional Judicial and Senatorial Conventions:

W. O. Conner, B. E. Honeycutt, Dr. I. E. Burnett, I. D. Holcombe, E. B. Carter, P. D. Ebbs, T. J. Frisbee, J. C. Sanders, Jasper Ebbs, J. J. Ramsey, C. A. Henderson, W. M. Roberts, Albert Teague, Steve Teague, T. J. Murray, Guy V. Roberts, J. R. Swann, C. J. Ebbs, J. J. Redmon, W. B. Ramsey, J. P. Redmon, N. B. McDevitt, W. R. Sams, T. N. James E. Z. Ray.

They passed a resolution that any other democrat attending these conventions be considered a delegate.

The Democratic Executive Committee for the county met immediately after the convention and elected N. B. McDevitt for County Chairman for the ensuing two years.

The meeting was very enthusiastic and all will hope for success in the different elections.

H. A. Waggoner, Alcoa, W. Va., says that Foley's Honey and Tar Compound is the best medicine for coughs and colds he has ever known. He says: "Every man and woman tells me it is the best they have ever used and whoever has used it once, always comes back for it again." There are no opiates in Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and it is safest for children. I. E. Burnett, Mars Hill N. C.

For, lo! The Winter is Past

Spring is in the air. We make note of it in the busting bud and fledgling leaf, and here and there a furtive tassel swinging in the wind. There is a fresh green on the grass where its clustering tufts no longer bow before the buffeting rains, but stand out, now, as if conscious of the coming of a milder clime. The sky is less troubled by clouds; all round the horizon it smiles down upon you with a deeper and kinder hue of blue. The sky! The sky! The sky! It is after all the sky that assures us most cordially of the coming of spring those azure patches of Sabbath-calm that lie between the cumuli of fleecy clouds; the quiet vistas that open out, yonder, away down in its aerial depths. We gaze long and have an ecstatic sense of an impalpable something, gently suffusing itself with the blood currents of our being, and making us one with this vast system of things, a new kindling now with cosmic hearts.

Go quiet into it; you cannot get its secret with your heart against a wall. It is a rapture to open the lungs and breathe its balmy air.

A time it is, when beauty is new born but it is beauty cradled on the landscape and rocked to and fro by the fragrant winds.

We recall our elder poets the frenzy of delight with which they hailed the beauties of spring as the unsurpassed adornments of their glowing verse, as if they had conned their numbers while walking ankle deep in the growing grass and hearing the cry of the plover in nervous flutter over its nest in the reeds. They sang of what they saw and seemed to catch the rhythm of the life currents that were beating around them in the earth and in the air.

With them it was no vision of nymphs, wearing their mazy dances over meadow and mere—rather a wraith made up of sunshine and mist, that swept the wide-landscape with its robes of dew.

But here we are, not poets indeed, the strings of the lyre will yield no music to our unskilled touch; our breath is not even plastic to the oaten pipe. Nevertheless the poets are not privileged above us, excepting, perhaps in the fineness of their insight, and their superior skill in getting their inspirations into song.

Nature is ours; the same seasons; the same sky; the same wide-sweeping horizon of mountains, plain and sea on which their eager eyes were wont to gaze. Imagination is ours, also, and our chamber of imagery is by no means scantily supplied. And—shall we venture to say it?—their method is ours their ways of getting into communion with the soul of the world.

Suppose, for example, you are abroad some fine spring morning, on your own account, companionless, as was Wordsworth custom; bent on getting the inner meaning of things by some kind of blending of your life with theirs. It is possible Wordsworth's theory of this matter was a poet's dream—the idea that the life of nature and the soul of the poet, coming together were instantly fused into a new experience for which neither element, in isolation could be made to stand.

It is a theory we cannot ardently espouse not withstanding it gave rare and rich fruitage to the poet of Rydal Mount in that golden garden he so industriously tilled.

Of this you may be certain—long brooding on the scenery before you, will work for you a rapture, the philosophy of which you need not care to understand. Enjoyment is the object, a momentary exaltation of soul, that will assure you that you need not be a life-long prisoner of the commonplace.

You have caught a vista let us suppose; a rare long reaching avenue among the trees; slopes that sweep in curves round the undulating hills; until an exposure of water terminates the view, with the over hanging sky mirrored in its depths. Spring is over it all; its footsteps of verdure; its choral voices; its mantle of green.

Now you miss it, if you turn a listless eye thitherward, and presently be up and away. You are to linger there, subduing your body into a frame of deepest repose, and interest on reaping what Wordsworth calls, "the harvest of the quiet eye." Indeed the eye is the chief agent of this magic result—invisible beauties will make themselves visible to the patient eye. You steady your gaze in absolute receptivity of the glories of the scene, not in the temper of the critic, to single out the elements of beauty that play hide-and-go-seek with you under the covert of the trees.

All impulse to analyze must be dismissed. How does this impress you? how what? Hush! a mood of worship must brood in silence; an articulate whisper will dissolve the charm. It is to be a clear case of photographing on the retina of the eye, first, and then this precious negative to be developed afterwards in the chambers of the brain.

Beauty is a subtle thing, a coy goddess—the very genius of silence stands guard at its gates. It is even said, that the great artists are those who have the gift of silence in an extraordinary degree; can at will call off all tumult of passion, when beauty puts its index finger on its sealed lips. But we are a restless race; our people prefer the bustle of the streets. You must not go moping on a spring-time morning; you have no time to lose; you are due for stern service in the warehouses and the banks. One of our great money magnates will go far, and be at lavish expense, to buy up an accredited masterpiece of the old masters, who thrive in the days when beauty held its magic wand over ecclesiastic councils and the courts of kings—not knowing that there was at his disposal, without money and without price, a masterpiece above all masterpieces, in the near-by meadow that awaited the brooding of his pensive eye.

He knew nothing of the pen-

Is It Your Fault?

A great many people suffer from their teeth. Many of them could find relief if they would let us put their teeth in good condition.

I do my work so carefully as to reduce the pain to a minimum—I do it so intelligently as to insure perfect teeth thereafter.
