The Temple of Justice.

The Temple of Justice is a temple of tragedy. It is a temple where happiness often yields to despair and smiles of joy are changed to tears of grief. We see here every phase of human society, every attribute of human life, every form of human character. Here are bosoms where gleam fierce flames of vice and crime and bosoms fragrant with the violet vales of truth where the goddess, virtue, sits enthroned. We see eyes wet with tears of penitence, hear piteous sobs of regret and words of pardon soft and sweet. We hear savage cries for vengeance there, and see wrapped with precious robes of purity hearts that lovingly forgive. Here lurk the demons of revenge with dripping sword in hand, while hovering near may be ever seen divine angels of mercy and justice. Beyond the gathering clouds of gloom is seen the trembling star of hope. There are hearts upon which fall the shadows of night and hearts crowned with the splendors of imperial day. We see dreadful pictures drawn and painted upon scarlet brows of shame; we see the thrown of honor there and the scepter held by lofty manhood's king. The thorns of hatred mingle with the roses of love. There are crimson stains upon garments of guilt and pearls of sweat that crown the brows of honest men. Hope and fear battle for the mastery of the life in peril or the heart in agony.

This picture is that drawn by Alvin V. Sellers and comes near being a faithful likeness of our courts.

Rev. W. E. Goode Leaves.

Rev. W. E. Goode, pastor of the Baptist Church of Marshall, left Monday on the west bound train for Louisville, Ky., where he will enter the Baptist Theological Seminary for the purpose of completing his course in Theology.

Mr. Goode has been the pastor of the Baptist Church here for about three years. During these years he has proven himself a most consecrated and earnest man. In our opinion there are no better men than Goode. He is honest, upright and faithful, and at all times standing with all his strength for the things he believes to be right. He is not a flash light, but a steady beam; he is not a storm, but a gentle sephyr; not a torrent but a gliding stream. There are but few preachers, if any, in North Carolina pulpits who preach out of a more profound understanding of the gospel than Mr. Goode. We have heard him many times and his sermons have been made up of beautiful thoughts, apt illustrations and the richest gems of the finest and most classical poems.

On last Sunday his text for the morning service was "My Church." The sermon was able and full of truth dealing with the subject from a scriptural and practical standpoint. At the evening service the sermon was equally able as at the morning service, his text being carved from these words: Beloved, now are we the sons of God, but it doth not appear that we shall be. The words "now" and "shall be" were used as the subject of the discourse. In discussing the "shall be" part of the text the point that it keeps us looking upward and struggling up to higher and better ideals and was illustrated by this little poem:

I asked the robin as he sprang

From branch to branch and sweetly sang,
What made his breast so round and red
"Twas looking upward to the sun,
he said.

I asked the violets sweet and blue
Sparkling with the morning dew,
Whence came their color? Then so shy,
They answered, "Looking toward the sky."

I saw the roses, one by one,
Unfold their petals to the sun.

I asked what made their tint so bright,
They answered "Looking toward the light."

I asked the thrush whose silvery note
Came like a song from angel throats
What made him sing in the twilight dim;
He answered, "Looking up to Him"

At the close of the service visible evidences of the love and esteem in which they held Mr. Goode were in evidence.

The good wishes of The News-Record follow Mr. Goode and his family.

MADISON COUNTY SCHOOLS.

The public school teachers of townships 8 and 13 met Saturday Sept. 20, at Spring Creek Seminary.

Supt. Anders was present and outlined the course of study for the year. This is an excellent course and if properly worked out by the teachers of the county, it can not fail to raise the standard of Madison's educational system.

Principal J. F. Edwards of Spring Creek Seminary gave a brief outline of O'Shea's "Everyday Problems of Teaching." This was followed by an informal discussion of the general and special problems by the teachers present.

A movement of importance was started when the teachers enthusiastically endorsed the plan for a county commencement. It is to be hoped that the teachers and educators of the county will give this their earnest support.

Incidentally, we are to be congratulated that our new Superintendent is a man of progressive ideas. Our meeting was full of life throughout.

The next meeting will be held Saturday, Oct. 18, 1913.

The hour having arrived and the teachers being present, the meeting was called to order by the Superintendent.

The teachers joined in singing "America," and Prof. S. R. Williams led in prayer.

William Worley, Jr., was asked to serve as secretary of the meeting. The names and addresses of teachers present were then enrolled, as appears in first part of this communication.

In his introductory remarks to the teachers Superintendent Anders announced that they are requested to read during the following month the first three chapters of "Every Day Problems in Teaching," and the "Outline in Language," and "Outline in Geography," which may be found in Educational Bulletin VIII.

In response to a call by Supt. Anders, Prof. S. R. Williams, principal of the Marshall Graded School, came forward and gave the teachers a gist of the first three chapters of "Every Day Problems in Teaching."

The teachers were asked to answer in regard to tardiness in their respective schools and to give their methods for eliminating and preventing the same. Those responding gave the following as helpful in accomplishing the ends desired: (1) Have an interesting opening exercise and vary it from day to day as much as is practicable, (2) see the parents of "tardies" and secure their co-operation, and (3) have the children make up for time lost in being tardy.

The meeting then adjourned till last Saturday in October, 1913.

WILLIAM WORLEY, JR.
Secretary.

"Poor, Old Dad."

The first "write up" on "Dad" that we have ever read appeared in last Sunday's Asheville Citizen and it is a very good one. Here it is:

"When some flippant genius gave birth to that 'gem' of minstrelsy, 'Everybody Works But Father,' the world laughed for a minute—and then the song was forgotten. Many self-appointed champions arose in their wrath and vigorously resented the slur on that patient, tired soul, known around the house as 'Dad'; you see, they did not grasp the hidden irony and sarcasm contained in the lines of 'Everybody Works But Father.' In reality the song was a means to a given end—a commendable desire to call the world's attention to the need of recognition of, an sympathy for, the old man, whose life knows naught but work—work from morn till night, day in and day out, year after year, until age and time put an end to his activities. Then, if there is a spare corner in the house, where he won't be in anybody's way, Father may be allowed to await the end under the roof of the house which he erected and supported that he might pass it over to his sons and daughters, as the case may be.

Poor, old Dad! There are songs galore for Mother, as there should be, and the world very properly shows deference to womankind, but nobody has ever indicted even a line to father's eyebrow. In the world of things creative Dad is merely a convenience, the poor old mule who pulls the load until his back is broken. There are "Mother's Days" in honor of the noblest of her race, but all days are alike to Father. For him no artist's brush will ever seek to catch the rainbow's hue; no poet sings of virtues rare or qualities sublime. Around his bier, when his last breath has become a sigh of welcome to the dawning rest of eternity, other weary souls like himself will gather and drop the furtive tear of memory. Some near relative, perhaps, in whose mind the last will and testament is up- permost, will brokenly murmur something about the old man having been a "good provider," and others will venture a statement about the natural expression of the corpse—but that's about all the bouquets Dad will get.

But who knows, but that when he reaches the Pearly Gates St. Peter will look around for the biggest and brightest crown for poor, old Dad?
