

FROM HOT SPRINGS

Our Sunday Schools are just fine and prayer meetings on Wednesday nights are doing fine with a large attendance.

The preacher lays his Bible down when the electric lights go out. Our lights are fine here for the market man will sell you stew instead of steak when the lights go out, and the barber can cut bread with the back of his razor as same as the dice when the light goes out.

Old Cabe was in town the other morning and he was somewhat amazed when he met a small water dog who had a rock in his paw and wanted to know where Mr. J. C. Sanders' large bulldog was.

"No. 9" is in loss of two well known citizen, Mr. John Howell and Fred Holder, who left for Marion, N. C. Those two families are well known here.

SOUTHERN BUILDING NEW ROLLING STOCK

SPARTANBURG, S. C., Oct. 17—Five magnificent passenger trains, embracing an expenditure of $3,000,000 are being constructed by the Southern Railway for service on the daily schedule of the Crescent Limited, the road's finest and fastest train between New York, Atlanta, and New Orleans, it is announced.

NORTH CAROLINA DIVIDED INTO DISTRICTS

For the purpose of securing men for the Army the United States is divided into Districts. We belong to the North Carolina District with headquarters at Fort Bragg, N.C.

There is great rivalry between these different Districts and sub-districts to make the best showing. At the present time Asheville, Sub-District is leading in North Carolina, with Madison in the lead and Yancey County, a close second, Buncombe County third and Henderson, Transylvania, and Swain Counties bring up the REAR.

The boys of Madison, Yancey and Buncombe Counties seem to appreciate the opportunities offered for learning a trade and bettering themselves for the future instead of going along in the same old rut year after year, going no further ahead at the end than they were in the beginning.

On last Saturday night near 12:00 o'clock the Death Angel visited the home of Mr. Lee Suttles and quietly took away the soul of a little infant, Maudie Suttles. She was only four months old. It was a great bereavement to part with her so soon.

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois

LITTLE DOGS WALTER had a worthless mongrel which he called a dog and which nearly ate the family out of house and home. It would have seemed a difficult task to give the beast away to anyone other than an infanticide when Walter imagined the one day by announcing that he had sold Tim for a hundred dollars.

SAVE ALL ROUGH FEED FOR WINTER USE

This is a good year to try one's ingenuity in saving all rough feeds on the farm for use as winter fodder. Much material that heretofore has been wasted might be used to advantage this year if properly stored and then cut or ground before giving to the livestock this winter. "There are many farms in North Carolina where lots of rough feed has been wasted and will be wasted this year," says Prof. R. S. Curtis. "With the shortage of hay and other feeds caused by the drouth over the mountain and piedmont sections of the State this is a good year to realize the value of the proverb 'Necessity is the mother of invention'. We must save all rough feed possible. Oftentimes, this rough feed may be ground or cut and mixed with a small amount of concentrated feed to make a palatable ration and one which may be beneficial. It will be valuable for tiding over winter."

Prof. Curtis states that stover, husks, wheat and oat straw, low grade hay and other similar roughages may be made to serve a useful purpose by mixing with them cottonseed meal in proportion ranging from 100 to 200 pounds of the meal to the ton of such roughage. This, of course, will provide feed for cattle and sheep only. Such a combination, states Prof. Curtis, will make it possible to carry breeding stock or stocker steers through the winter in very good condition. "Take care of all the waste roughage available this fall," advises Prof. Curtis.

Johnson started out very well in our community. His father had given him a small farm with only a nominal sum to be paid on it, and if Johnson had stayed by the job he would soon have been out of debt and in comfortable circumstances. He was dissatisfied, however. He traded the farm for a larger holding in Texas where the climate was hot, and the soil was hard-pan, and the water was heavily alkali, and where Johnson soon became dissatisfied and discouraged. It was a case of little dogs, and he came back shortly much poorer than when he went away. All his life he has been keeping up the same practice. He is an old man now, who has gone from one thing to another thinking at each change and at each trade that he was getting a bargain; always dissatisfied with the situation in which he found himself and always hopeful that the next would prove a wonderful bonanza. Throughout his life he has been getting together a bunch of little dogs that have eaten him out of house and home until at seventy-five he is poorer than he was at twenty. Helton is in college. He goes to class irregularly, he studies little, he runs about most of the time in a broken-down car full of flappers and foolish companions. He's spending a lot of money, but he isn't learning a great deal, he isn't getting anywhere. He's just accumulating a litter of little dogs. As I said, it's quite a common practice, this trading for little dogs. (©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)
