OFFICE KAT KOLUM

By the "Office Cat"

Boy, boy! Who would think that I would ever have had such a good photograph of myself as the one above. Gee, whiz! I'm tickled "pink" with my "pictur."

At the bottom of my Kolum this week will be seen a picture of my "boss," or the one who writes his Kolum for me, as he looked at my picture. Now, why the mirthful expression on his face? I don't see anything so daggone funny about it (I mean my picture, not his). But then he's always grinning about something. I think that if he wuz forced to stay solemn even for a week, that he'd "kick the bucket."

Well, daddin' 'em, they wouldn't let me write my Kolum last week, on account of the paper being crowded, but I'll write it this week or bust, by gosh, and I don't intend to bust. Aw! What's the use, tho? I was inspired last week, and this week I'm as dumb as a brick, so that's all.

Zowie! What about that nice, warm, spring-like weather that we have had the privilege to enjoy lately. Gee, whiz! It's so daggone spring-like that it is almost too good to be true. But, "be that as it may, it could not was."

You know, sometimes I think I'll just blindfold myself and sit down and write this Kolum. Maybe that would be some improvement over the way it is at present. At any rate, it could not be much worse. Sometimes I feel like giving up the whole business, and just letting the Kolum drop, but then I receive so many heart-breaking requests that I can't let the Kolum that I usually haven't the heart to refuse the readers of this special privilege of reading such wonderful literature. But that's enough to say about my Kolum. Any more praise might make me blush. I'm so exceedingly modest, y' know.

Following is one spasm of an original poem (that is, it is original with me). Don't say that the second and last lines do not rhyme, because I am aware of this fact, but I have my reasons for not letting them rhyme. Be as it may, here it is:

Why in the deuce did they name me O. K.?
Why couldn't I have been named Sam?
When they called me this, I had nothing to say,
But you know I didn't like it worth a darn!

Safety, silence and simplicity are features of the new Ford six-brake system

ONE of the first things you will notice when you drive the new Ford is the quick, effective, silent action of its six-brake system.

This system gives you the highest degree of safety and reliability because the four-wheel service brakes and the separate emergency or parking brakes are all of the mechanical, internal expanding type, with braking surfaces fully enclosed for protection against mud, water, sand, etc.

The many advantages of this type of braking system have long been recognized. They are brought to you in the new Ford through a series of mechanical improvements embodying much that is new in design and manufacture. A particularly unique feature is the simple way by which a special drum has been constructed to permit the use of two sets of internal brakes on the rear wheels.

A further improvement in braking performance is effected by the self-centering feature of the four-wheel brakes—an exclusive Ford design.

this construction, the entire surface of the shoe is brought in steady, uniform contact with the drum the instant you press your foot on the brake pedal. This prevents screeching and howling and makes the Ford brakes unusually silent in operation.

Another feature of the Ford brakes is the ease of adjustment.

The four-wheel brakes are adjusted by turning a screw conveniently located on the outside of each brake plate. This screw is so notched that all four brakes can be set alike simply by listening to the "clicks."

The emergency or parking brakes on the new Ford require little attention. However, should they need adjustment at any time, consult your Ford dealer for prompt, courteous, and economical service. He works under close factory supervision and he has been specially trained and equipped to help you get the greatest possible use from your car over the longest period of time at a minimum of trouble and expense.
