IN MEMORY OF OUR DEAR GRANDMOTHER, MRS. JOSIAH PRICE, OF TRUST, NORTH CAROLINA

The Angels wanted a pure rose,
 And they plucked our grandmother from her pose;
 She was aged, old and grey,
 The sunshine of her home each and every day.

God wanted, one day, an Angel,
 And He chose our grandmother, sweet;
 For it took her smiles in Heaven,
 To make the realm complete.

Yet a husband grieves for his loved one who is gone,
 And his aged face grows pale and wan;
 While he seeks for God's protection
 As he travels the stormy main.

We miss our grandmother dear,
 Whom we've grown used to having near;
 The children weep in fear as the sad thoughts of her,
 Bring agony and bitter tears.

We grandchildren mourn for our grandmother,
 And wish for her presence more;
 But grandmother is far from our dwellings,
 And is treading a beautiful shore.

Her caresses made her home happy,
 And of happiness, and a home in another world, she dreamed of,
 too;

And God wished for our darling grandmother,
 And her dreams came true.

She was tidy and neat in her labor,
 To all a kind and affectionate neighbor;
 She was ever a pure character,
 And obeyed each caution and rule of life.

She took her bed in the Spring,
 And suffered long days with pain;
 Though hope was not springing,
 That she would yet walk again.

But Angels came for dear grandmother,
 And her broken form was lifted;
 And her soul grew white with waiting,
 And her face grew still and white.

FOR AN EASY SUMMER

These are the days when you are not only busy planning spring menus, but in the back of your mind also lurks the problem of stocking that summer bungalow up in the mountains or providing proper provender for your family at that shack down by the shore. Wherever you are going, if you're going to keep house, the food supply is subconsciously on your mind, and a few good new recipes will not come amiss.

We're not going to suggest to you what to take along, or have sent, because you probably have a pretty good idea of that already. It's a useful hint, however, to remember to leave your correct address with your grocer so that you can be sure of a dependable supply of canned and dried foods if the local dealers don't happen to carry your brands. For, if there are certain brands of foods which you have tested, tried and found true, it's a mighty good thing to stick to them. Not all brands are alike, and the cheapest "old friends" old wives' old books are best" apply equally well to processed foods which have proved themselves. As canned foods are less generally sold, they are as good as they were the day they were first put up.

Children, Gold or Hot
 Your family should not eat much heavy meat in summer, so chicken is a good dish to serve. Here are a couple of chicken dishes with all the fun and features of treating with the teachers left out.
