THE SOURCE OF HUMAN CONFLICTS

Memory Selection: "Follow peace with all men." — Hebrews 12:14.

Lesson Text: James 3:4-5; 4:1-10.

No one will deny that the world is in a period of human conflicts—not bodily conflicts, but struggles over ancient hatreds, conflicting economic and political thought and for survival. It is so today, and as far as history records, it has been so.

Just as a conflict between neighbors is caused by sin—usually the sin of selfishness and greed—so is all human conflict the result of sin. That means that the solution of the problem must come when hearts and manners of living have been changed. No one group on the face of this earth has a greater problem in helping find the solution than have those who profess to be followers of Jesus Christ, who followed the way for new hearts and resulting new and better ways of life.

The world in James' time was similar to the world in our time. It was a quarrelsome, murderous world. While we like to think of the early church as being an ideal one, and it was in many respects, it was not entirely ideal. James shows that among the early believers there was bitterness and jealousy, which divided them into certain factions, constantly at enmity toward each other.

The third chapter of James' epistle ends with a statement about peace, but the fourth chapter begins with a call to repentance. In typical style, James, in short, terse, sharp sentences, sets the nation of sinners before the mirror of sin.

The peace of which James was speaking was not the quiet which follows military conflict, but that which follows strife and bickerings between persons, groups and even churches. James declared that the cause of such strife is selfishness—which is the cause of most sin in the world.

If you will carefully analyze most of the troubles—personal, national and worldwide—you will realize that selfishness, expressed in evil desires and greed is at the bottom of them all. One nation attacks another, professing to maintain national honor or to defend a frontier. Strikes by labor and work stoppage by management are explained by "unsatisfactory conditions." Church contentions are often justified on the pretense of preserving the faith which was once delivered.

Plato has wisely said: "Wars, and factions, and fighting have no other source than the body and its lusts. It is for the getting of wealth and all our wars arise and we are compelled to get wealth because of our body, to whose service we are slaves."

James' call to repentance applies, not only to those who have not yet accepted Christ as his personal savior, but also to those professing Christians whose hearts had been full of worldly pleasures. Within the four verses, 7 to 10, there are seven verbs in the imperative mood: Submit, resist, draw near, cleanse, purify, lament and mourn, and humble.

If one will study these verbs, it will be seen that they are steps in repentance. The first step in repentance is approach to God, with the will to resist the temptation of the evil forces in the world. The second is a closer walk with God, knowing that if we turn to him, he will meet us more than half way.

If one gets close to God, he will realize the need of cleansing. Before the ancient Jew entered the Temple, he first cleansed himself. Cleansing of the hands and heart denotes cleansing of the whole of life, both outward and inward, a full consecration, with no compromise, no split loyalties.

Godly sorrow for past sins is another phase of real repentance. It is always difficult to admit that we have been wrong, that we
