School People In N. C. "Up In Arms" Over Bill; Had Demanded Hearing

Raleigh - The Madison County school superintendent bill was executed quietly Tuesday by its introducer, Sen. Albert L. Canipe, of Canipe said he introduced the bill by request and he was killing it by request. It has raised a storm of protest in school circles throughout the state.

A hearing on the measure had been set for this (Thursday) morning by the Senate Education Committee, headed by Sen. James G. Stikeleather Jr., of Buncombe. In view of Canipe's action, Stikeleather announced that the hearing was canceled.

Immediately after the Senate convened, Sen. Canipe moved that the controversial bill be withdrawn from the Education Committe. Then he moved that it lie upon the table, which meant killing it.

The Senate voted for both motions without discussion or ques-

Canipe's meaure would have lowered the qualifications required to hold the job of school superintendent in Madison County. He reportedly introduced it at the request of the new Madison Board of Education, consisting of B. K. Meadows, chairman; Jeff Whitt agent; two clerical assistants to and Zeno Ponder. He apparently killed it at their request.

The retreat by the backers of the bill apparently began last week when the Asheville Citizen revealed that Rep. Fred Holcombe of Madison had declined to introduce the measure because he "didn't think it was a good bill." That story pointed out that the bill could have been tailored to open the superintendent's job

School people throughout the

Shortly after Canipe killed the bill. Stikeleather started notifying school leaders that the scheduled hearing had been called off.
