THE FIRST SPADE of dirt was turned by Ernest C. Moore of Asheville for the Robert Lee Moore Memorial Auditorium and Fine Arts Building at Mars Hill College while his sister, Mrs. O. E. Roberts, of Mars Hill, looked on. The action was the highlight of groundbreaking ceremonies on the campus Saturday. Tribute to their father, former president of the college for whom the building was named, was paid by Dr. Hoyt Blackwell, current president of the school. A construction contract for the million-dollar building has been awarded to L. B. Ballinay Construction Co., of Greensboro. Work is expected to start soon with completion of the 1,800-seat auditorium and new home for the departments of music, art, drama and Bible expected by December, 1960.

J. M. Baley, Jr.

held a similar post. Baley graduated from Asheville High School, attended Mars Hill College and received a Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of North Carolina in 1931. Two years later he finished the law school and became admitted to the bar in Asheville. In the years following he has been active in the community.
