

FOR THE PEOPLE

BERNADETTE W. HOYLE

 of Public Welfare

"In public welfare in North Carolina, paramount consideration is given to the total needs of the child and his family, and financial assistance is made available only when required and eligibility requirements are met."
 —Dr. Ellen Winston, Commissioner.

Some of the most successful respected citizens in North Carolina are men and women who, when they were young, were recipients of aid to dependent children grants from the county departments of public welfare.

One of these is the principal of a school in the western part of the State.

Some of the children who are now pupils in his school come from families who are receiving aid to dependent children payments. "I find myself comparing their circumstances with my early childhood days," said the principal. "I know that the aid to dependent children program has helped raise the standard of living socially, economically, and morally in family groups."

The principal himself was one of four children whose father died when they were very young, leaving the mother without economic security. Their only possessions were a modest home and one acre of land. The mother tried, unsuccessfully, to work outside of the home, but realized that the children needed her in the home and paying someone else to care for them was too expensive.

She applied for aid to dependent children and was eligible to receive help. As a result, the children were kept in school and all were graduated from high school. Two of the sons drove the school bus for several years and during the summers all the children secured jobs.

The eldest son enlisted in the armed services after high school graduation and made an allotment to his mother for three years. She then requested termination of the aid to dependent children grant.

When he returned home, he attended college through his G. I. educational grant and part-time work. After graduation he became principal of an elementary school and during the summers attended college and secured his M.A. degree.

Now, reminiscing about his childhood, he stated that the aid to dependent children check, though small, meant food and clothes for the children. He remembers the genuine interest which the caseworkers showed in his family and declared that she was always a welcome visitor, for whom they had great respect. Paying tribute to his mother, he stated that she knew how to "do the most with the least."

The other children in the family are also self-supporting, tax-paying citizens. This case, from the files of a county department

TIP TO PARENTS

Learn to understand your children — it is the most important phase of child management.

In Loving Memory
 of our dear mother
DAISY FRANKLIN
 who passed away Jan. 7, 1962

It is lonesome here without you. We miss you more each day. Somehow life doesn't seem the same.

Since you went away. Our hearts still ache with sadness. Our eyes shed many a tear. God alone knows how much we miss you. As this ends the first year. Sadly missed by
