Absentee Bill - (Continued From Page One)

House when Thornburg's original bill was sent to a subcommittee that came up with a substitute measure generally regarded as considerably weaker than the original. While the House election laws committee wrangled over this substitute, the Senate bill was also sent to a subcommittee which produced its own substitute version.

This version, received favorably by the state board, incorporated most of the original recommendations. But, as in the final draft passed Thursday, it distinguished between persons chronically ill and those suffering sudden illnesses.

The chronically ill will be allowed to obtain absentee ballots without a doctor's certificate. Only those stricken ill in the final five days before an election must produce such proof.

The Senate substitute, however, still required that the applications and ballots be handled through the mail only. This version was passed by the Senate unanimously and sent to the House.

There, the elections committee displaced its bills, began amending the Senate measure to allow the voter himself either to apply for and receive his absentee ballot in person or through the mail. This was virtually the only change made, but it was drafted as a House committee substitute for the Senate committee substitute for Senate bill 10 - Stikeleather's original measure.

Although Stikeleather's immediate reaction to the House action was one of disappointment, the Senate Election Laws Committee accepted the changes and recommended approval by the full Senate.

That approval came Thursday. No one asked for an explanation of the bill, none was offered and no one voted against it.

The measure, meanwhile, had picked up approval from William Joslin, chairman of the State Board of Elections. This largely explained the acceptance in the Senate, which during the lengthy proceedings over the better part of three months, heaved much more closely to Joslin's recommendations than did the House.

The bill also picked up something else, largely overlooked in all the hue and cry aroused by the bill: During initial protest to the original House bill, Madison Rep. Liston B. Ramsey, objecting to the time that would be necessary for handling all communications by mail, pointed out that persons in the Peace Corps overseas couldn't possibly meet the time limits provided.

He figured that minimum of five mailings would be required and up to seven could be required, before a Peace Corpsman's absentee ballot worked its way to the box. The illustration aroused a lot of laughter, but the Senate took it seriously.

And North Carolina's absentee ballot law now adds members of the Peace Corps to those in armed forces for whom special provision always has been made for absentee voting.

a bipartisan basis and that terms be staggered to assure continuity of service.

After a couple of Senate committees had finished sniping at the bill, it was amended to provide that any board of education could by resolution remove itself from the provisions of the law.

Also, legislators would be free to exempt their counties.

Sen. B. E. Jones of Rutherford arose to inquire, in a tone of wonder, just what the bill would do in the light of the amendments.

Johnson admitted that little was left of it except "the number and the title."

Brantley thereupon moved that the bill and amendments be killed. When the eyes came in strong and clear, President Stone didn't bother to call for the noes.

Patrol is the best in the nation. The national ratings place it at the top and my observation of other states confirms this rating. All citizens should be proud of our individual troopers who every day risk their lives to make our highways safe. The troopers are doing an outstanding job and there is no group which exceeds their devotion to duty.

"We will enforce the laws fairly and firmly, but we will not forget that our first mission is to save lives, the Governor concluded.

The trial, which began last week, went to the jury about noon Tuesday. The jurors returned once to receive a detailed explanation of the government's legal definition of conspiracy, then brought out their unanimous verdict shortly thereafter.

ly signed an election (Notice) by the May 13 deadline thereby making all the producers on such farms eligible to vote in the May 21 Wheat Referendum. He further pointed out that 97 County Producers visited one of the four polling places established within the County, that 88 voted in favor of the one year program that provided for rigid controls of production with a $2.00 National average per bushel support price and that 9 producers voted against the program.

In conclusion, Ramsey commended the ASC Community Committeemen and others who did a splendid job in explaining and publicizing the provisions of the Wheat Program with the County wheat producers and also the producers who took time out from their work to visit the polls.

shameful behavior as experienced in Alabama, Mississippi, and other states.

He spoke of the advance being made in aviation and orbital exploration and said that we must keep up and progress with the changing times. He also spoke of specialization and proper instruction in our schools. He cautioned the group about the appalling "drop-out" statistics in our schools and said that if our children didn't maintain a desire for high education that the future would indeed be critical.

He also spoke of industrial development in this area and said that statistics proved that thousands of rural people were annually moving to urban areas for employment. He stated that it was most difficult to keep boys on the farm and one way to sustain an economy and stop the exodus of our youth was to bring in industry.

Bradburn said that Madison County people were the "salt of the earth" and he told of the fine reputation local employees had at industrial plants in this area.

Following his address, the roll call of classes revealed that the class of 1934 had the most present (50); 1939 had four. Four classes - '30, '32, '33, and '36 - had three present.

taking drivers' test on account of this," Delemar told the committee. "I contend these people know their limitations and if they can't parallel park they drive around until they find a diagonal parking space. This has nothing to do with highway safety," he added.

The Department of Motor Vehicles often requires old people to take a road test as well as a written test to qualify for a license every four years. Delemar said he knew of several cases in which old people suffered heart attacks from taking the tests because of the strain over parallel parking.

Cumberland Rep. Sneed High opposed giving the proposed exemption to people over 65 only, saying the exemption discriminated against younger drivers.

Lenoir Rep. Rachel Davis also spoke against the measure. But on a voice vote for a favorable report there was only a scattering of noes heard.
