on you?" "O, no," Robinson explained. "That is, not in the traditional manner of drunken gypsies. But she did tell me that I would live to see my children and grandchildren. I was so impressed by her words that I said then and there, 'If I'm actually going to live to see them, I'll have to make some changes in my way of living.' The other boys laughed, but I was serious for the first time in my life."

"And you become a Christian as a result of a drunken fortune teller's prophecy?"

"Not exactly," the young clergyman added. "Later I went to hear George Whitfield preach and it was his sermon that really brought me to my senses. I will remember the text of that message as long as I live," he continued. "He preached from Matthew 3:7, 'But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?'"

"So between the two of them, you saw the light and accepted the Lord."

"Yes," Robinson explained. "As I look back upon it all, I can see that God had a hand in it. Each person I met seemed like a guide in a wilderness, pointing out to me the way that God wanted me to go. I feel almost like Samuel after the battle in which the forces of Israel routed the Philistines at Mizpah."

"How is that?" his friend asked.

"The story is told in 1 Samuel 7:5-13. After the victory Samuel set up a stone at the scene of his triumph and called it Ebenezer, which meant 'Hitherto the Lord hath helped us'. I feel that there have been many such Ebenezers in my own life—places and times when I have been unusually conscious of the fact that 'Hitherto the Lord has helped me'. In fact, I have incorporated that idea in the second stanza of a new Pentateuch. "Did she put a curse or a hex
