Today's MEDITATION from The World's Most Widely Used Devotional Guide

The Upper Room

Read Matthew 28:10-20 Because I live, ye shall live also. (John 24:19.)

In the midst of a storm, a little bird was clinging to the limb of a tree, seemingly calm and unafraid.

Because of Christ's resurrection, each Christian can look the experience of death in the face and confidently say, "Shake me off; I still have wings. I'll live anyway."

Death can do the Christian no injury. Like birth, it is an incident in life. As birth opens up for a baby the opportunities of life in this world, so death opens up for a Christian a much larger and finer type of life than that which he experiences here in the flesh.

To be able to face the experiences of death unafraid, with the assurance of life beyond that experience, is the high privilege of a Christian. It gives new meaning to mortal life.

Prayer Our Father, while we have the privilege of living here, may we fill each day with things most worthwhile. Help us to make this world a better world because of our living in it.

Thought for the day: Is the life I am living worthy of being perpetuated throughout eternity? -Wayne A. Lamb (Kentucky)

the fourth grade of Mars Hill's white school.

Anderson School now has 17 pupils and one teacher for the first six grades. Monday's meeting was the upshot of a pair of Negro PTA meetings in Mars Hill, the first one March 10 attended by the Rev. Charles Davis of Mars Hill Baptist Church, Mars Hill College associate professors Richard Hoffman and Robert Melvin, and Madison County Schools Supt. Robert L. Edwards.

Edwards said Monday he heard of the meeting two days prior to it during a telephone inquiry about ceasing bus service to Mars Hill for Negro pupils living in Marshall.

Briscoe said Mr. Davis, Melvin and Hoffman were invited to the first meeting because the three were interested in the Negro educational situation. None of them was present at Monday's board meeting.

The requests were made for a new school building and a second teacher at the second meeting, March 26, Briggs said and he was in turn bringing them before the board at this meeting.

Ponder directed Briscoe to return and again poll the Negro parents on their wishes. Requests for reassignments to white schools must be made by Monday, June 1, Ponder told Briscoe.

"You tell them that the chairman of the board thought their requests were just a shade unreasonable," Ponder said.

At the earlier meeting before Briscoe, other Negro school committee members and Mrs. Griffin had arrived, attorney Davis and Asheville jeweler W. E. Roland, long a leader in local integration, had conferred with the board.

Ponder pointed out that he was not encouraging integration, but he wanted to know how the Mars Hill Negro parents felt. He and other board members indicated that, if most of the Negroes wanted integration, they would get it. "But it will be all the way," Ponder told Dailey. "We're not going to operate a school for two or three pupils.

Later he said that the integration would include the older pupils brought to Asheville for the seventh through 12th grades. "We're not going to send them to an integrated school for six years, then pay transportation to carry them to a segregated school in Asheville."

Ponder said he respected the 1954 Supreme Court decision affecting desegregation as the law of the land and the Madison Board would abide by it.

Questioned by Ponder, Dailey said he had represented the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in several school desegregation suits in Western North Carolina, among them Yancey County, Hendersonville, Transylvania County, Buncombe County, Morganton and Shelby.

"How many have you lost?" asked Ponder. "None," replied Dailey.

Ponder then observed that he didn't like to go to court in suits which he couldn't win.

Board attorney A. E. Leake added: "I have told the board I didn't want to be put in a position of defending law suits I couldn't win."

Other members of the Negro school committee present included Mrs. Augusta Ray and Arcemus Roland.

Ponder also reiterated his statement, made earlier when he was informed of the PTA meeting that he was "disturbed" about the PTA counseling with Mr. Davis, Hoffman and Melvin. He said he believed the Negroes in Madison had found the board understanding and sympathetic.

Moore took the most optimistic view of the state's fiscal condition, saying that tax revenues during the next biennium would permit a 10 per cent boost in state workers' salaries.

He said such an increase would cost $25 million during the budget period, not the $40 million figure Sanford administration officials have quoted.

Moore also promised to work toward achievement of a $67 million program for the public schools advocated United Forces of Education.

He did not comment on his call for $27 million in income tax relief.

Preyer took a wait and see attitude. "The question is whether it is responsible at this time," he said, "to promise these things when we don't know what the surplus will be."

Lake, quoting figures he said he received from State Treasurer Edwin Gill, warned that a deficit may face the 1965 Legislature.

When the three were questioned on poverty in North Carolina, especially in rural areas, and in their plans for coping with it, Lake declared:

"As I have traveled from the coast to the mountains, I have been looking for this poverty and I just can't find it. We've got a great state in North Carolina. We are not a poverty-ridden state."

Preyer called for an attack on poverty "up and down the line," but basically through education. Moore advocated help for farmers wishing to remain on the land and he urged greater industrialization.

A LITTLE SUNSHINE Spread a little sunshine every day of the year - life will be more enjoyable if you do.

Moore's talk concerned his ideas of the role of the governor and Preyer discussed the future of the state.

The questions asked during the second-half of the program ran the gamut of public affairs.

Preyer said he favored an increase in the state's minimum wage, Moore suggested holding off on such a measure until the 1965 General Assembly has a chance to look at the state's economic picture, and Lake indicated disapproval with the concept of government-decreed minimum wages.

Lake said "It is my position that wages should be fixed by some source other than the Legislature."
