OUR CONTINUING RESPONSE

"I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus." -- (Philippians 3:14)

Further pursuing our examination of our growth as Christians, we ponder the questions: Why does growth often require change? And what kinds of changes are required?

The fundamental basis of our lesson for today is the fact that Christian growth has its roots in a renewing through Jesus Christ, our Lord. A baby cannot continue to grow until such time as it is born -- a living, breathing thing, independent of its mother's womb. This is true, also, of the soul.

And just as a child goes through all the painful stages of growing up into a mature person, with all the joy, the heartbreak, the sense of content of childhood and adolescence, so does the soul of man come to the ultimate -- maturity in Christ.

Paul instituted many churches in his time; his mission in life was to spread the good word of Christianity among the peoples. This he did wholeheartedly, albeit with much heartbreak and disappointment and setbacks. So it is with us, as individual Christians, struggling towards a Christ-like concept of mankind.

If we look back on Paul's life we can see the great changes he wrought within himself. He had, indeed, a rich heritage. He was born into the Jewish faith -- a true-blooded member of his race. He could trace his ancestry back to Benjamin, who fathered a small but proud tribe from whose ranks had been chosen Israel's first king Saul. He observed the law strictly, as did most conscientious members of his race. All this Paul cherished -- until he found something better -- Jesus Christ.

Paul's concept of values changed completely when he accepted Christ into his life. He reduced his assets -- to put it into present-day language -- to a fundamental and meaningful basis -- Christ Jesus. And although the long years in Christ's service were to bring much suffering to Paul, he went to his death a happy man, his innermost convictions unshaken.

For Christ provides a reserve of strength for the soul of man. He is the font of immeasurable riches, the possession of which appeals to the best in the nature of mankind.

The man who has it "easy" in life cannot begin to appreciate his good fortune. It is the poor man, who has reached a sense of security for himself and for his loved ones through unmitigated struggle who can truly appreciate his good fortune, for he is aware of the sweetness of the fruits of his labor because it was so hard-won.

So it is with Christian steward-
