University Days For Homemakers Scheduled In June

University Days for Homemakers is scheduled for June 14-16 at the North Carolina State University at Raleigh, Mrs. Ethel Wallin, extension home economist, Madison County, announced today.

The program planning committee has made preliminary plans for this annual statewide event. The three-day program will include a variety of special interest groups, entertainment, tours, and other attractions.

Outstanding authorities will discuss woman's role in public affairs, in her own civic organization and in conserving our natural resources. Another discussion will center around "Art in Our Lives."

Highlighting the event will be a talk by John H. Farbay, Director, Air World Education for Trans-World Airlines. He will talk on "The Four Dreams of Man."

All interested women are invited to participate in this annual statewide event at N. C. State University. The N. C. Agricultural Extension Service sponsors University Days for Homemakers.

Mrs. Massey, 92, Dies In Asheville; Native Of County

Funeral services were held Sunday in the Bowman Funeral Home Chapel for Mrs. Hattie Payne Massey, 92, who died Thursday, May 19, 1966 in an Asheville hospital.

The Rev. Jack L. Thomas officiated and burial was in the Walnut Cemetery.

Mrs. Massey was a native of Madison County and had been in a nursing home in Asheville for the past seven years.

She and her husband formerly operated a mercantile business in Barnard.

Surviving are one grandson, Leonard Massey, of Hadley, Ark., and several nieces and nephews.

The above picture of Wade and Clayton Wilson is an example of what is taking place on many Madison County farms. There are ten farmers who are carrying on tobacco tests in cooperation with the county Extension staff and N. C. State University.

Wade and Clayton Wilson are conducting a test at Paw Paw which demonstrates different methods of applying fertilizer to tobacco. Effects on yield and quality are compared at the time of harvest. This same test is being conducted by Emery Walker on Big Laurel.

Tests which compare different stages of harvest are being conducted by Spencer Rollins of Meadow Fork and Roland Landers of Big Laurel.

To demonstrate the value of different methods of controlling suckers in tobacco, Wade Reeves of Little Sandy Mush, will conduct a series of tests.

Black Root Rot is one of our most costly tobacco diseases. In order to learn more about resistant varieties, Jack Ball is growing six varieties on Caney Fork.

Fumigation is another method of controlling black root rot. Twenty different treatments are being compared on the E. M. Jenkins farm below Dry Branch.

On Upper Brush Creek, Tillery Buckner is testing the resistance of six different varieties to black shank. Black shank can be one of our most destructive tobacco diseases.

Gay Merrill will be testing the value of Magnesium on tobacco, at his farm on Bone Camp Road. A test comparing the value of fourteen varieties of tobacco is being conducted on Grapevine by J. D. Gosnell.

These tests are being conducted for the benefit of Madison County farmers. They should be of interest to all farmers in the county. Make a point of seeing the ones in your community and any of the others that you possibly can.

Results of these tests will be made available by your county Extension office at the end of the year.
