UPPER FRENCH BROAD REPORT

The Upper French Broad Commission aims to improve and develop resources in the counties of Buncombe, Haywood, Henderson, Madison, and Transylvania. There are 240,000 people in this Upper Branch Broad Basin. To improve the area's resources first priority must be given to human resources. A most important factor in determining per capita income is to establish the earning power of the people as reflected in wages and salaries. The most effective way of raising earning power is improvement of education.

Public schools must be upgraded and improved if future workers are to be provided with education as good as that being received in other parts of the country.

Emphasis should be given to industrial training to supply the particular skills needed by existing and potential employees. More adult education must be offered by schools and colleges. Skills must be found to improve the skills and abilities of present employees who lack adequate training or education. On the job training or evening education courses could be offered to more people by industry and educational institutions working together.

The construction of a two year community college in one of the five counties would help. One natural resource which will contribute to future growth is water. Use of remaining water supplies must be planned carefully. It cannot be left to chance whether best uses will be found. The people of the Upper French Broad Basin must act now to solve the problem of water pollution, of the adequate water supply, of flooding losses and water recreation.

A cooperative multi-purpose water resources development program must be instituted if the 240,000 people are to realize total development.

The Upper French Broad Economic Development Commission proposes such a program. The plan calls for construction of 12 lakes and 3 dry dams in the five-county area. The three 'dry dams' would impound water only in the event of flooding conditions. Benefits of the water resources project would be: (1) Adequate water supply; (2) Water for water quality control; (3) System for flood control; (4) Recreation. The water resources plan is a result of cooperative effort of the North Carolina Department of Water Resources, North Carolina State University, the Western North Carolina Regional Planning Commission, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the County Commissioners of Buncombe, Haywood, Henderson, Madison, and Transylvania, and the Upper French Broad Commission.
