Outstanding Play Now At Thomas Wolfe Playhouse

A modern and elaborate fairy tale for adults is the Avenue Players' current presentation which began Tuesday at the Thomas Wolfe Playhouse in Asheville. The play is "The Caucasian Chalk Circle" by Bertolt Brecht, author of the classic "Threepenny Opera." The play runs through Saturday night.

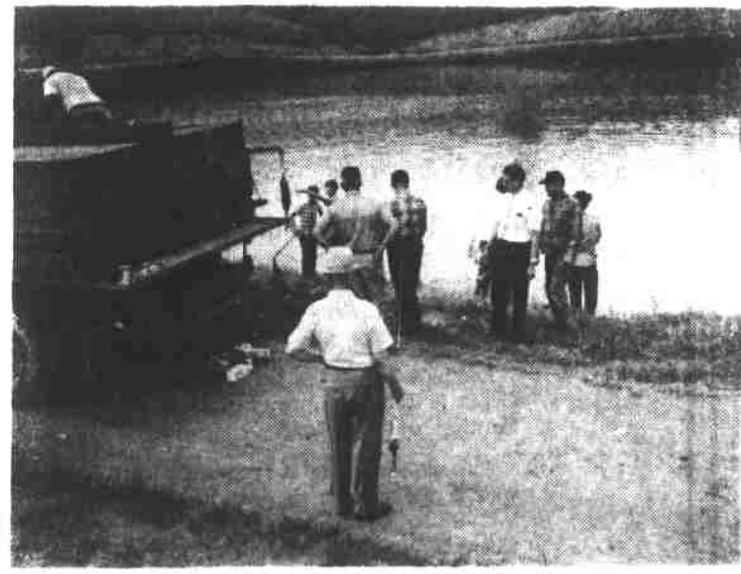

The drama is about the conflicting claims of two women for possession of a child. One of them is the child's mother, who carelessly leaves him behind as she hastily flees the outbreak of a revolution. The other is a tender-hearted servant named Grusha who saves the child and cherishes him through many hazardous adventures at the cost of losing her true love.

Later, when the real mother seeks to regain her child, the fostering mother refuses to give him up. Their quarrel must be decided in a primitive court room by a village druid named Azdak, who has been made a judge by an accident.

He decides the case by the test of a chalk circle, with something of King Solomon's wisdom in settling a similar issue over possession of a child.
