Instead of throwing out bacon because it has dried out or stuck to its cardboard container, use a plastic Tupperware Bacon Keeper for storage. Though they can store as much as two pounds, these see-through keepers are slim and flat enough to fit into even the smallest refrigerator space. And their airtight seals keep bacon fresher longer.

Eggs tend to keep longer when stored head end up because this position protects the yolk or cell just below the broad end of the shell.

New tomato tier handles 12 acres per day - one operator

Probably about the newest thing going around these parts—and even across the country, is the Tomato Tier that is reputed to tie as much as 12 acres per day with one machine and only one operator.

Designed by Paulk Engineering Enterprises, this simple but unusual machine is on display now at the Pigeon Valley Tomato Co., which will serve also as the dealer for the Paulk Tomato Tier in Western North Carolina, North Georgia and East Tennessee.

Way Abel, owner of the Pigeon Valley Tomato Company said that "this implement has been used for some three years on an experimental basis and is now on the market for the first time." "Right now," Abel stated, "we have two of the machines, one for our own use and one for display and demonstration purposes."

The machine is self-propelled by an eight horse power engine and has a variable ground speed of approximately one mile an hour. It ties one row at a time, from 54 inches to 72 inches in width. It is designed to tie as much as 15 workers per day. "Cost of the machine," states Abel, "is just under $3,000." "I anticipate limited production of the tomato tier this year with a definite increase next season."

Abel will be at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville today (Thursday) demonstrating the equipment.

To complement the work and time saving tier, Abel also has on display an automatic Tomato Staker, also designed by Paulk.

The staker mounts on the tractor, can stake as much as six acres per day with a one row staker and two people. It operated by hydraulic system on the tractor or hydraulic pump with reservoir, has a tool bar transport available for two row staking and the stake depth is regulated by the tractor lift and an adjustable plate.

It will sell for around $700 and is also on display at Pigeon Valley Tomato Co. in Haywood.

Abel added that he was "very much pleased to have these machines available to help the farmers in the area. Either or both of these machines will be a definite advantage to the tomato growers of Western North Carolina."

Community Development Plans Given

A stepped up effort to assist North Carolina communities in the development of their total resources has been outlined in a comprehensive educational program of the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service.

The effort calls for emphasis on housing, job training, employment, recreation, health and planned use of water and land resources.

The North Carolina State University-based Extension Service sets specific goals to be reached by 1976, largely through the cooperation with other planning and developmental agencies and groups on the local, state and national levels.

One goal calls for increased public housing units from 22,000 to 60,000 by 1976, the termination date of the Extension Service's Impact '76 program.

Training programs are planned in helping low income families determine alternatives available to them to improve their living conditions.

In the area of education and manpower development, the extension agency sets forth plans to enroll 40,000 people a year in occupational training.

Assisting communities in planned development is designed to contribute to increased per capita and median family income, especially in economically depressed areas.

The Impact '76 program, which was developed county by county with the assistance of some 10,000 Tar Heel citizens, includes plans for encouraging community recreation programs for all age groups, young and old.

Extension also outlines plans to continue to help local leaders and organized groups in their efforts to improve health programs in North Carolina communities.

The community development segment of the long range Extension Service program cites planned use and development of water and land resources as a major priority area in the next five years.

An important message for people who prepare their own income tax returns.

Maybe you've been cheating yourself all these years.

Every year, between January and April, all about deductions for child care or millions of people sit down to do battle with Uncle Sam. Some are "self styled" accountants. Others think they can save a few dollars doing it themselves—so why not?

The sad truth is, however, no matter what their reason was for starting, many of them end the same. On the short end.

You see, when it comes to income taxes, amateurs should depend on H & R Block. We have all the facilities to help you make "income tax time" a pleasant experience. To begin with, H & R Block now has over 6,000 conveniently located offices manned by thousands of specially trained personnel who are anxious to help you. They'll sit you down over a free cup of coffee and show you some things about your income tax that you might never have known existed. For example, do you know casualty losses? And maybe you aren't aware that if your income increased last year, you may be able to save tax dollars by "income averaging."

Well, when it comes to income taxes, H & R Block is aware of just about everything because we're a company that eats, sleeps, and drinks tax returns 365 days a year.

Yes, maybe you can save a couple of bucks by doing your own return but it really may be costing you a lot more by not having your return done by H & R Block.
