Health Watch Heart Attacks Show Decrease

Heart disease is the number one killer in the country today. One in every 100 American men will have a newly recognized ischemic heart event (first heart attack, onset of chest pain, or sudden death without warning) this year.

That's the bad news. The good news is that over the last few years there has been a decrease in the number of heart attacks. Also, due to improved technology, the survival rate for those who suffer heart attacks has improved. The victim who reaches the hospital alive has a better chance than ever of surviving and returning to an active life.

Reaching the hospital quickly is critical for survival since many complications occur within the first few minutes and hours after an attack. The North Carolina Medical Society stresses the importance of recognizing a heart attack when it happens.

Many people may walk around with chest pain for days or weeks before their attack simply because they think they are suffering from indigestion. Usually angina pectoris (heart cramp) shows up days or weeks before an attack and becomes more and more frequent with less and less exertion.

Finally a severe episode of pain that lasts from 30 to 60 minutes or longer signals a heart attack. The sensation of pain may feel like a crushing or squeezing under the breast bone, radiating into the arms and neck. Also accompanying this is a shortness of breath, sweating, weakness, nausea, dizziness and fainting.

Some people are at greater risk than others because of conditions they cannot control. Heredity may place certain people at greater risks. Women have a lower death rate than men from heart attacks although it increases after sharply se, and blacks are nearly twice as likely to have high blood pressure, a con-

There are important factors that people can control. Among them are weight, diet, exercise and smoking.

A middle-aged man, 20 percent over his normal weight, has a two to three times greater risk of a fatal heart attack. But counting calories isn't enough. It is also necessary to watch cholesterol, a fatty material which may cause deposits on artery walls which interfere with blood flow. Avoid foods like pastries, butter, whole milk, liver, kidney, fatty meats and egg volks.

Exercise is also important to keep the heart muscle strong. Also, smokers have a 50 to 100 percent greater risk of heart attacks than nonsmokers.

Your heart beats over 100,000 times a day to keep about eight pints of blood circulating through your body. If you take care of it, it will last you a long time.
