Many Don't Realize WIC Program Can Offer Assistance

Many Madison County women with young children may be eligible for assistance through the federal Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children, better known as the WIC program.

The following information provided by the Madison County Dept. of Social Services should answer many questions regarding the program.

Q: Even though my husband works, we are still having trouble keeping food on our table. My neighbor says that we may be eligible for the WIC program. What is the program?

A: The WIC program is a federal assistance program administered by the state of North Carolina through county social service agencies.

The program is designed to help insure that pregnant, breastfeeding or post partum women and their infants and children under five receive some of the basics in nutrition. The WIC program provides coupons for milk, cheese, cereals, fruit juices, eggs and dried beans for women and young children. Infants can receive formula, cereals and fruit juices through the program. The foods are provided at no charge to all who qualify.

Eligibility for the program is governed by income guidelines, but the eligibility levels are higher than those used for the food stamp program. Many working families with children are eligible for assistance and income is just one of the criteria for participation. Women and children suffering from low iron in the blood are also eligible, as are those who are either under or overweight.

The WIC program also provides nutrition counseling from trained nutritionists. The WIC program is administered without regard to race, color, national origin, political beliefs, sex, age handicap.

For more information on the program, contact the Madison County Dept. of Social Services at 649-3135.
