The News Record Participates In 'Learn To Read' Program

The News Record is participating in "Learn to Read," an instructional reading program for illiterate adults.

There are an estimated 27 million functionally illiterate adults in the United States, meaning that they cannot read at a fifth-grade level. Approximately 1.5 million of these are in North Carolina.

The program is sponsored by K-mart and local news media.

The "Year of the Reader" is sponsored by the Library of Congress Center for the Book, and its goal is to make reading more accessible to Americans of every age, social status and ethnic group.

Keeping with the goal, "Learn to Read," a series of 30 half-hour programs, will be aired Saturday mornings at 6 a.m. on WLOS-TV (Channel 13) beginning Saturday.

Channel 13 is one of 60 television stations across the country airing the "Learn To Read" series, which is billed as a "Sesame Street" for adults.

Each program will begin with a 5-minute review of the previous day's lesson. The lesson portion of the program will consist of 15 minutes of introduction and practice of new material.

Separating the program elements are one-minute capsules of information intended to instruct and entertain, as well as to provide a break from the more seriously approached curriculum.

A daily segment called "Getting Along" will teach the viewer practical reading skills such as how to recognize important signs, read food and product labels, use a telephone book, etc.

The program continues through Oct. 3. Weekly lessons will appear in The News Record.

South African Activist To Speak At College

The Rev. Motalepula Chabaku, a South African activist and United Church minister, will be at Mars Hill College Monday and Tuesday for a special series of lectures and meetings with Mars Hill students.

She will be on campus for a series of meeting with students and faculty on Monday, and on Tuesday she will be the speaker for Mars Hill's community meeting, to be held in Moore Auditorium at 10 a.m.

On Tuesday afternoon, she will participate in a special Great Decisions lecture which will be held in Peterson Conference Center at 3 p.m.

Chabaku, whose first name means "one who come with the rain," was born in Johannesburg and grew up in the apartheid society of South Africa. Through an Anglican Church scholarship, she was able to complete her undergraduate education and meet classmate Desmond Tutu, now an Anglican Archbishop and perhaps the best-known spokesman for South African rights and justice.

After completing her education, she worked as a school teacher and social worker. She founded the now-banned Black Women's Federation of South Africa, and served as secretary and full-time organizer for the Women's League of the African National Congress (ANC), also now outlawed.

She was Executive Member of the ANC's Youth League before it was outlawed, and was national president of the South African Voice of Women, a multiracial women's organization which sought to promote racial reconciliation in South Africa.

Fleeing to the United States, she pursued her education, winning additional degrees from N.C. A&T University, Elizabethtown College in Pennsylvania and Lancaster Theological Seminary. She has recently been granted political asylum by the U.S. State Department.

Chabaku is presently an ordained Methodist minister in Aabeboro. She travels widely as an activist, speaking as an advocate for South African blacks, women's issues and faith-centered work for justice.

She is active in several women's United Nations and civil rights organizations. Her work has taken her to Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East. She was the keynote speaker several years ago at the United Nations Mid-Decade for Women and the Women's Forum in Copenhagen.

The Tuesday lectures are open to the public at no admission charge, and ample time will be given for questions and answers at the afternoon Great Lectures session.

Mars Hill's campus minister, the Rev. Marie Bean, may be contacted for additional information at 689-1128.

But every Sunday found him in church, sitting on the same pew, attempting to go through the motions of worship in harmony with the other worshippers. Yet, his every act of worship was a strain carried out in his world of silence. A close friend wrote on a piece of paper and handed it to the old man. He read, "Why do you go to church? You can't hear a word that is said." Calling on his broken and faltering English remembered from his hearing days, he said, "To let people know whose side I'm on!" He continued, "At worship in church I may not hear much, but I FEEL MUCH. I feel what's happening around me; the music's rhythm touches me; the prayers hold me close; the smiles on people's faces during the sermon and the intensity I sense from them, give me a feeling of God's presence." Worshiping in church gives a feeling that no other expression of God's presence approaches. No wonder the writer of Hebrews instructed: "Forsake not the assembling of ourselves together."
