scenary to suggest certain improve ments and the adding of app fire protection equipment in and factories, and in depar and factories, and in department stores and other pinces where people work or congregate. These sugges-tions are always made for the pur-pose of saving human life and pro-tecting property, and also with the intent of giving due credit for such improvements, thereby reducing the cost of insurance on the pland. Al-Chough true economy is su following these suggestions, which are invariably in the interest of the owner, despite the initial cost of such improvements, some property man-agers or owners show a spirit of re-sentment and look upon the advice of the rating bureau as an interforence with their rights of preprietorshy.

Apart from imposing deficiency charges for the absence of approved firs protection equipments, the rating bureaus have no antherity to enforce the observance of their requirements. But is it to be taken for granted that the matter ends at this point? Does not the measure to life and grouperty continue? And is it to be accounted continue?
