HOME CANNING METHOD.

Bulletin Gives Directions for Canning Fruits and Vegetables

Canning fruits and vegetables in the home by the one-period cold-pack method is a relatively simple process and can be done with ordinary kitchen equipment and with comparatively little labor. Much of the surplus of the home garden can be saved for winter use by this canning method, which is fully described in a bulletin issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, Farmers' Bulletin 839, Home Canning by the One-Period Cold-Pack Method. This bulletin is of special interest and value to all housewives, canning clubs, societies, or persons interested in conserving the food supply of the Nation. It may be had on application to the United States Department of Agriculture.

The bulletin contains very explicit directions for canning practically all of the common garden vegetables, including tomatoes, peppers, sweet peppers, pumpkin, squash, sweet corn, field corn, beans, peas and root vegetables, also various combinations of vegetables. It also includes canning directions for soft fruits and berries, and hard fruits, as apples, pears, or quinces. Directions for the canning of camp rations, meats, and soups are given in detail.

Each step in the canning process by the one-period cold-pack method is carefully outlined from the preparation of the equipment and the raw materials to the storing of the canned products. A special time-table showing how long fruits, vegetables, soups, and meats should be scalded, blanched, or sterilized, is of particular value to the housewife. Various types of homemade and commercial canning outfits are described.

PELLAGRA

Raleigh, July 24.—A lessening of the prevalence of pellagra is promised as one result of the campaign in North Carolina and throughout the country for a substitution of whole-wheat flour and other cereal products for the ordinary commercial white flour. Not a great deal of fuss has been made about pellagra during the past few years, but the disease is probably as prevalent as it ever was, although physicians have learned better how to treat it.

In a conversation with Executive Secretary John Paul Lucas of the State Food Conservation Commission Dr. C. H. Croom, one of the best known physicians of Wilmington, who has had considerable experience in treating pellagra, declared that he was confident that the almost exclusive use of white wheat flour for bread-making has been and is responsible in a large measure for this dread disease. Dr. Croom remarks upon the fact that pellagra was almost unknown until the advent of the modern roller mill.

White flour contains a much smaller percentage of protein, fat and mineral than does flour containing a larger percent or all of the wheat grain, and in wholesomeness, the two products are not to be compared. In treating pellagra the modern physician depends more largely upon the variety of diet than upon medicine.

Secretary Lucas is of the decided opinion that one of the most valuable results of the campaign for food conservation and for the largely increased number of gardens is going to be better general health for the people of the State and Country. "It is a certainty," declares Mr. Lucas, "that the more varied diet induced by the utilization of the largely increased number of gardens and by the substitution of corn and other cereal products for white wheat flour will decrease the large number of ailments due to faulty diet and will result in greater strength and vigor even for those strongly constituted individuals who are rarely troubled by any perceptible indisposition."

Mrs. W. H. Williams, of Griffin, Ga., who is spending weeks in North Carolina visiting relatives, returned yesterday from a week's stay at Wrightsville Beach.
