HIS HEAD WASN'T FLAT NOR HIS BRAIN WASN'T WEAK.

The recruiting officer in a medium sized town turned down a volunteer because he was physically unfit to fight in the trenches. The young man was anxious to fight, he was anxious to get at the Hun and his swaggering officers first hand. But his chest was too shallow; his heart was weak; his feet were flat. He was rejected unconditionally. When he got back behind the men's furnishing counter, his regular job, these words kept ringing in his ears: "Rejected!" "Not fit to fight!" "Flat feet, heart weak, not fit to fight!" Finally, determination seized him. With his fist clenched, he banged the counter in front of him, saying to himself, "I will fight. My feet may be flat, and my heart weak, but my head isn't flat nor my brain isn't weak. If I can't fight with a gun over there, I can fight with some-
